

Mythology Photography Fiction Fishing
Christianity Art Cooking Essays
Buddhism Freemasonry Medicine Biology
Music Ancient Egypt Evolution
Carpentry Physics Dance Geology
Vermorel Mathematics Fitness Shakespeare
Science Yoga Marketing Confidence
Immortality Biographies Poetry
Psychology Witchcraft Electronics
Chemistry History Law Accounting
Philosophy Anthropology Alchemy Drama
Quantum Mechanics Atheism Sexuality
Personal Health Ancient History Criminal
Entertainment Sports Languages Sport
Paleontology Nature Viewport Science
Metaphysics Investment Archaeology

Forgotten Books

— www.forgottenbooks.com —

Copyright © 2016 FB &c Ltd.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, distributed, or transmitted in any form or by any means, including photocopying, recording, or other electronic or mechanical methods, without the prior written permission of the publisher, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical reviews and certain other noncommercial uses permitted by copyright law.

TRÜBNER'S ORIENTAL SERIES.

“A knowledge of the commonplace, at least, of Oriental literature, philosophy, and religion is as necessary to the general reader of the present day as an acquaintance with the Latin and Greek classics was a generation or so ago. Immense strides have been made within the present century in these branches of learning; Sanskrit has been brought within the range of accurate philology, and its invaluable ancient literature thoroughly investigated; the language and sacred books of the Zoroastrians have been laid bare; Egyptian, Assyrian, and other records of the remote past have been deciphered, and a group of scholars speak of still more recondite Accadian and Hittite monuments; but the results of all the scholarship that has been devoted to these subjects have been almost inaccessible to the public because they were contained for the most part in learned or expensive works, or scattered throughout the numbers of scientific periodicals. Messrs. TRÜBNER & CO., in a spirit of enterprise which does them infinite credit, have determined to supply the constantly-increasing want, and to give in a popular, or, at least, a comprehensive form, all this mass of knowledge to the world.”—Times.

Second Edition, post 8vo, pp. xxxii.—748, with Map, cloth, price 21s.

THE INDIAN EMPIRE : ITS PEOPLE, HISTORY, AND PRODUCTS.

By the HON. SIR W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D.

Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council,
Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India.

Being a Revised Edition, brought up to date, and incorporating the general results of the Census of 1881.

“It forms a volume of more than 700 pages, and is a marvellous combination of literary condensation and research. It gives a complete account of the Indian Empire, its history, peoples, and products, and forms the worthy outcome of seventeen years of labour with exceptional opportunities for rendering that labour fruitful. Nothing could be more lucid than Sir William Hunter's expositions of the economic and political condition of India at the present time, or more interesting than his scholarly history of the India of the past.”—The Times.

THE FOLLOWING WORKS HAVE ALREADY APPEARED:—

Third Edition, post 8vo, cloth, pp. xvi.—428, price 16s.

ESSAYS ON THE SACRED LANGUAGE, WRITINGS, AND RELIGION OF THE PARISIS.

BY MARTIN HAUG, PH.D.,

Late of the Universities of Tübingen, Göttingen, and Bonn ; Superintendent of Sanskrit Studies, and Professor of Sanskrit in the Poona College.

EDITED AND ENLARGED BY DR. E. W. WEST.

To which is added a Biographical Memoir of the late Dr. HAUG
by Prof. E. P. EVANS.

- I. History of the Researches into the Sacred Writings and Religion of the Parsis, from the Earliest Times down to the Present.
- II. Languages of the Parsi Scriptures.
- III. The Zend-Avesta, or the Scripture of the Parsis.
- IV. The Zoroastrian Religion, as to its Origin and Development.

“ ‘Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis,’ by the late Dr. Martin Haug, edited by Dr. E. W. West. The author intended, on his return from India, to expand the materials contained in this work into a comprehensive account of the Zoroastrian religion, but the design was frustrated by his untimely death. We have, however, in a concise and readable form, a history of the researches into the sacred writings and religion of the Parsis from the earliest times down to the present—a dissertation on the languages of the Parsi Scriptures, a translation of the Zend-Avesta, or the Scripture of the Parsis, and a dissertation on the Zoroastrian religion, with especial reference to its origin and development.”—Times.

Post 8vo, cloth, pp. viii.—176, price 7s. 6d.

TEXTS FROM THE BUDDHIST CANON COMMONLY KNOWN AS “DHAMMAPADA.”

With Accompanying Narratives.

Translated from the Chinese by S. BEAL, B.A., Professor of Chinese, University College, London.

The Dhammapada, as hitherto known by the Pali Text Edition, as edited by Fausboll, by Max Müller's English, and Albrecht Weber's German translations, consists only of twenty-six chapters or sections, whilst the Chinese version, or rather recension, as now translated by Mr. Beal, consists of thirty-nine sections. The students of Pali who possess Fausböll's text, or either of the above-named translations, will therefore needs want Mr. Beal's English rendering of the Chinese version; the thirteen above-named additional sections not being accessible to them in any other form; for, even if they understand Chinese, the Chinese original would be unobtainable by them.

“Mr. Beal's rendering of the Chinese translation is a most valuable aid to the critical study of the work. It contains authentic texts gathered from ancient canonical books, and generally connected with some incident in the history of Buddha. Their great interest, however, consists in the light which they throw upon everyday life in India at the remote period at which they were written, and upon the method of teaching adopted by the founder of the religion. The method employed was principally parable, and the simplicity of the tales and the excellence of the morals inculcated, as well as the strange hold which they have retained upon the minds of millions of people, make them a very remarkable study.”—Times.

“Mr. Beal, by making it accessible in an English dress, has added to the great services he has already rendered to the comparative study of religious history.”—Academy.

“Valuable as exhibiting the doctrine of the Buddhists in its purest, least adulterated form, it brings the modern reader face to face with that simple creed and rule of conduct which won its way over the minds of myriads, and which is now nominally professed by 145 millions, who have overlaid its austere simplicity with innumerable ceremonies, forgotten its maxims, perverted its teaching, and so inverted its leading principle that a religion whose founder denied a God, now worships that founder as a god himself.”—Scotsman.

Second Edition, post 8vo, cloth, pp. xxiv.—360, price 10s. 6d.

THE HISTORY OF INDIAN LITERATURE.

By ALBRECHT WEBER.

Translated from the Second German Edition by JOHN MANN, M.A., and THÉODOR ZACHARIAE, Ph.D., with the sanction of the Author.

Dr. BUHLER, Inspector of Schools in India, writes:—"When I was Professor of Oriental Languages in Elphinstone College, I frequently felt the want of such a work to which I could refer the students."

Professor COWELL, of Cambridge, writes:—"It will be especially useful to the students in our Indian colleges and universities. I used to long for such a book when I was teaching in Calcutta. Hindu students are intensely interested in the history of Sanskrit literature, and this volume will supply them with all they want on the subject."

Professor WHITNEY, Yale College, Newhaven, Conn., U.S.A., writes:—"I was one of the class to whom the work was originally given in the form of academic lectures. At their first appearance they were by far the most learned and able treatment of their subject; and with their recent additions they still maintain decidedly the same rank."

"Is perhaps the most comprehensive and lucid survey of Sanskrit literature extant. The essays contained in the volume were originally delivered as academic lectures, and at the time of their first publication were acknowledged to be by far the most learned and able treatment of the subject. They have now been brought up to date by the addition of all the most important results of recent research."—Times.

Post 8vo, cloth, pp. xii.—198, accompanied by Two Language
Maps, price 12s.

A SKETCH OF THE MODERN LANGUAGES OF THE EAST INDIES.

By ROBERT N. CUST.

The Author has attempted to fill up a vacuum, the inconvenience of which pressed itself on his notice. Much had been written about the languages of the East Indies, but the extent of our present knowledge had not even been brought to a focus. It occurred to him that it might be of use to others to publish in an arranged form the notes which he had collected for his own edification.

"Supplies a deficiency which has long been felt."—Times.

"The book before us is then a valuable contribution to philological science. It passes under review a vast number of languages, and it gives, or professes to give, in every case the sum and substance of the opinions and judgments of the best-informed writers."—Saturday Review.

Second Corrected Edition, post 8vo, pp. xii.—116, cloth, price

THE BIRTH OF THE WAR-GOD.

A Poem. By KALIDASA.

Translated from the Sanskrit into English Verse by RALPH T. H. GRIFFITH, M.A.

"A very spirited rendering of the Kumárasambhava, which was first published twenty-six years ago, and which we are glad to see made once more accessible."—Times.

"Mr. Griffith's very spirited rendering is well known to most who are at all interested in Indian literature, or enjoy the tenderness of feeling and rich creative imagination of its author."—Indian Antiquary.

"We are very glad to welcome a second edition of Professor Griffith's admirable translation. Few translations deserve a second edition better."—Athenæum.

Post 8vo, pp. 432, cloth, price 16s.

A CLASSICAL DICTIONARY OF HINDU MYTHOLOGY AND RELIGION, GEOGRAPHY, HISTORY, AND LITERATURE.

By JOHN DOWSON, M.R.A.S., Late Professor of Hindustani, Staff College.

“This not only forms an indispensable book of reference to students of Indian literature, but is also of great general interest, as it gives in a concise and easily accessible form all that need be known about the personages of Hindu mythology whose names are so familiar, but of whom so little is known outside the limited circle of savants.”—Times.

“It is no slight gain when such subjects are treated fairly and fully in a moderate space; and we need only add that the few wants which we may hope to see supplied in new editions detract but little from the general excellence of Mr. Dowson's work.”—Saturday Review.

Post 8vo, with View of Mecca, pp. cxii.—172, cloth, price 9s.

SELECTIONS FROM THE KORAN.

By EDWARD WILLIAM LANE,

Translator of “The Thousand and One Nights;” &c, &c.

A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with an Introduction by STANLEY LANE POOLE.

“... Has been long esteemed in this country as the compilation of one of the greatest Arabic scholars of the time, the late Mr. Lane, the well-known translator of the ‘Arabian Nights.’ ... The present editor has enhanced the value of his relative's work by divesting the text of a great deal of extraneous matter introduced by way of comment, and prefixing an introduction.”—Times.

“Mr. Poole is both a generous and a learned biographer. ... Mr. Poole tells us the facts ... so far as it is possible for industry and criticism to ascertain them, and for literary skill to present them in a condensed and readable form.”—Englishman, Calcutta.

Post 8vo, pp. vi.—368, cloth, price 14s.

MODERN INDIA AND THE INDIANS,

BEING A SERIES OF IMPRESSIONS, NOTES, AND ESSAYS.

By MONIER WILLIAMS, D.C.L.,

Hon. LL.D. of the University of Calcutta, Hon. Member of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford.

Third Edition, revised and augmented by considerable Additions, with Illustrations and a Map.

“In this volume we have the thoughtful impressions of a thoughtful man on some of the most important questions connected with our Indian Empire. ... An ‘enlightened observant man, travelling among an enlightened observant people, Professor Monier Williams has brought before the public in a pleasant form more of the manners and customs of the Queen's Indian subjects than we ever remember to have seen in any one work. He not only deserves the thanks of every Englishman for this able contribution to the study of Modern India—a subject with which we should be specially familiar—but he deserves the thanks of every Indian, Parsee or Hindu, Buddhist and Moslem, for his clear exposition of their manners, their creeds, and their necessities.”—Times.

Post 8vo, pp. xlv.—376, cloth, price 14s.

METRICAL TRANSLATIONS FROM SANSKRIT WRITERS.

With an Introduction, many Prose Versions, and Parallel Passages from Classical Authors.

By J. MUIR, C.I.E., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D.

“... An agreeable introduction to Hindu poetry.”—Times.

“... A volume which may be taken as a fair illustration alike of the religious and moral sentiments and of the legendary lore of the best Sanskrit writers.”—Edinburgh Daily Review.

Second Edition, post 8vo, pp. xxvi.—244, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE GULISTAN;

OR, ROSE GARDEN OF SHEKH MUSHLIU'D-DIN SADI OF SHIRAZ.

Translated for the First Time into Prose and Verse, with an Introductory Preface, and a Life of the Author, from the Atish Kadah,

By EDWARD B. EASTWICK, C.B., M.A., F.R.S., M.R.A.S.

“It is a very fair rendering of the original.”—Times.

“The new edition has long been desired, and will be welcomed by all who take any interest in Oriental poetry. The Gulistan is a typical Persian verse-book of the highest order. Mr. Eastwick's rhymed translation . . . has long established itself in a secure position as the best version of Sadi's finest work.”—Academy.

“It is both faithfully and gracefully executed.”—Tablet.

In Two Volumes, post 8vo, pp. viii.—408 and viii.—348, cloth, price 28s.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS RELATING TO INDIAN SUBJECTS.

By BRIAN HOUGHTON HODGSON, Esq., F.R.S.,

Late of the Bengal Civil Service; Corresponding Member of the Institute; Chevalier of the Legion of Honour; late British Minister at the Court of Nepal, &c., &c.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.

SECTION I.—On the Kocch, Bódó, and Dhimál Tribes.—Part I. Vocabulary.—Part II. Grammar.—Part III. Their Origin, Location, Numbers, Creed, Customs, Character, and Condition, with a General Description of the Climate they dwell in.—Appendix.

SECTION II.—On Himalayan Ethnology.—I. Comparative Vocabulary of the Languages of the Broken Tribes of Népal.—II. Vocabulary of the Dialects of the Kiranti Language.—III. Grammatical Analysis of the Váyu Language. The Váyu Grammar.—IV. Analysis of the Báhing Dialect of the Kiranti Language. The Báhing Grammar.—V. On the Váyu or Háyu Tribe of the Central Himaláya.—VI. On the Kiranti Tribe of the Central Himaláya.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.

SECTION III.—On the Aborigines of North-Eastern India. Comparative Vocabulary of the Tibetan, Bódó, and Gá ró Tongues.

SECTION IV.—Aborigines of the North-Eastern Frontier.

SECTION V.—Aborigines of the Eastern Frontier.

SECTION VI.—The Indo-Chinese Borderers, and their connection with the Himalayans and Tibetans. Comparative Vocabulary of Indo-Chinese Borderers in Arakan. Comparative Vocabulary of Indo-Chinese Borderers in Tenasserim.

SECTION VII.—The Mongolian Affinities of the Caucasians.—Comparison and Analysis of Caucasian and Mongolian Words.

SECTION VIII.—Physical Type of Tibetans.

SECTION IX.—The Aborigines of Central India.—Comparative Vocabulary of the Aboriginal Languages of Central India.—Aborigines of the Eastern Ghats.—Vocabulary of some of the Dialects of the Hill and Wandering Tribes in the Northern Sircars.—Aborigines of the Nilgiris, with Remarks on their Affinities.—Supplement to the Nilgirian Vocabularies.—The Aborigines of Southern India and Ceylon.

SECTION X.—Route of Nepalese Mission to Pekin, with Remarks on the Watershed and Plateau of Tibet.

SECTION XI.—Route from Káthmándú, the Capital of Nepál, to Darjeeling in Sikim.—Memorandum relative to the Seven Cosis of Nepál.

SECTION XII.—Some Accounts of the Systems of Law and Police as recognised in the State of Nepál.

SECTION XIII.—The Native Method of making the Paper denominated Hindustan, Népalése.

SECTION XIV.—Pre-eminence of the Vernaculars; or, the Anglicists Answered; Being Letters on the Education of the People of India.

“For the study of the less-known races of India Mr. Brian Hodgson's ‘Miscellaneous Essays’ will be found very valuable both to the philologist and the ethnologist.”—Times.

Third Edition, Two Vols., post 8vo, pp. viii.—268 and viii.—326, cloth, price 21s.

THE LIFE OR LEGEND OF GAUDAMA,

THE BUDDHA OF THE BURMESE. With Annotations.

The Ways to Neibban, and Notice on the Phongyies or Burmese Monks.

BY THE RIGHT REV. P. BIGANDET,

Bishop of Ramatha, Vicar-Apostolic of Ava and Pegu.

“The work is furnished with copious notes, which not only illustrate the subject-matter, but form a perfect encyclopædia of Buddhist lore.”—Times.

“A work which will furnish European students of Buddhism with a most valuable help in the prosecution of their investigations.”—Edinburgh Daily Review.

“Bishop Bigandet’s invaluable work.”—Indian Antiquary.

“Viewed in this light, its importance is sufficient to place students of the subject under a deep obligation to its author.”—Calcutta Review.

“This work is one of the greatest authorities upon Buddhism.”—Dublin Review.

Post 8vo, pp. xxiv.—420, cloth, price 18s.

CHINESE BUDDHISM.

A VOLUME OF SKETCHES, HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL.

By J. EDKINS, D.D.

Author of “China’s Place in Philology,” “Religion in China,” &c., &c.

“It contains a vast deal of important information on the subject, such as is only to be gained by long-continued study on the spot.”—Athenæum.

“Upon the whole, we know of no work comparable to it for the extent of its original research, and the simplicity with which this complicated system of philosophy, religion, literature, and ritual is set forth.”—British Quarterly Review.

“The whole volume is replete with learning. . . . It deserves most careful study from all interested in the history of the religions of the world, and expressly of those who are concerned in the propagation of Christianity. Dr. Edkins notices in terms of just condemnation the exaggerated praise bestowed upon Buddhism by recent English writers.”—Record.

Post 8vo, pp. 496, cloth, price 18s.

LINGUISTIC AND ORIENTAL ESSAYS.

WRITTEN FROM THE YEAR 1846 TO 1878.

By ROBERT NEEDHAM CUST,

Late Member of Her Majesty’s Indian Civil Service; Hon. Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society;

and Author of “The Modern Languages of the East Indies.”

“We know none who has described Indian life, especially the life of the natives, with so much learning, sympathy, and literary talent.”—Academy.

“They seem to us to be full of suggestive and original remarks.”—St. James’s Gazette.

“His book contains a vast amount of information. The result of thirty-five years of inquiry, reflection, and speculation, and that on subjects as full of fascination as of food for thought.”—Tablet.

“Exhibit such a thorough acquaintance with the history and antiquities of India as to entitle him to speak as one having authority.”—Edinburgh Daily Review.

“The author speaks with the authority of personal experience. . . . It is this constant association with the country and the people which gives such a vividness to many of the pages.”—Athenæum.

Post 8vo, pp. civ.—348, cloth, price 18s.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; or, Jataka Tales.

The Oldest Collection of Folk-lore Extant :

BEING THE JATAKATTHAVANNANA,

For the first time Edited in the original Pāli.

By V. FAUSBOLL ;

And Translated by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS.

Translation. Volume I.

“These are tales supposed to have been told by the Buddha of what he had seen and heard in his previous births. They are probably the nearest representatives of the original Aryan stories from which sprang the folk-lore of Europe as well as India. The introduction contains a most interesting disquisition on the migrations of these fables, tracing their reappearance in the various groups of folk-lore legends. Among other old friends, we meet with a version of the Judgment of Solomon.”—Times.

“It is now some years since Mr. Rhys Davids asserted his right to be heard on this subject by his able article on Buddhism in the new edition of the ‘Encyclopædia Britannica.’”—Leeds Mercury.

“All who are interested in Buddhist literature ought to feel deeply indebted to Mr. Rhys Davids. His well-established reputation as a Pali scholar is a sufficient guarantee for the fidelity of his version, and the style of his translations is deserving of high praise.”—Academy.

“No more competent expositor of Buddhism could be found than Mr. Rhys Davids. In the Jātaka book we have, then, a priceless record of the earliest imaginative literature of our race; and . . . it presents to us a nearly complete picture of the social life and customs and popular beliefs of the common people of Aryan tribes, closely related to ourselves, just as they were passing through the first stages of civilisation.”—St. James's Gazette.

Post 8vo, pp. xxviii.—362, cloth, price 14s.

A TALMUDIC MISCELLANY;

OR, A THOUSAND AND ONE EXTRACTS FROM THE TALMUD,
THE MIDRASHIM, AND THE KABBALAH.

Compiled and Translated by PAUL ISAAC HERSHON,

Author of “Genesis According to the Talmud,” &c.

With Notes and Copious Indexes.

“To obtain in so concise and handy a form as this volume a general idea of the Talmud is a boon to Christians at least.”—Times.

“Its peculiar and popular character will make it attractive to general readers. Mr. Hershon is a very competent scholar. . . . Contains samples of the good, bad, and indifferent, and especially extracts that throw light upon the Scriptures.”—British Quarterly Review.

“Will convey to English readers a more complete and truthful notion of the Talmud than any other work that has yet appeared.”—Daily News.

“Without overlooking in the slightest the several attractions of the previous volumes of the ‘Oriental Series,’ we have no hesitation in saying that this surpasses them all in interest.”—Edinburgh Daily Review.

“Mr. Hershon has . . . thus given English readers what is, we believe, a fair set of specimens which they can test for themselves.”—The Record

“This book is by far the best fitted in the present state of knowledge to enable the general reader to gain a fair and unbiassed conception of the multifarious contents of the wonderful miscellany which can only be truly understood—so Jewish pride asserts—by the life-long devotion of scholars of the Chosen People.”—Inquirer.

“The value and importance of this volume consist in the fact that scarcely a single extract is given in its pages but throws some light, direct or refracted, upon those Scriptures which are the common heritage of Jew and Christian alike.”—John Bull.

“It is a capital specimen of Hebrew scholarship; a monument of learned, loving, light-giving labour.”—Jewish Herald.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.—228, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY OF THE JAPANESE.

By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN,

Author of "Yeigo Heñkaku Shirañ."

"A very curious volume. The author has manifestly devoted much labour to the task of studying the poetical literature of the Japanese, and rendering characteristic specimens into English verse."—Daily News.

"Mr. Chamberlain's volume is, so far as we are aware, the first attempt which has been made to interpret the literature of the Japanese to the Western world. It is to the classical poetry of Old Japan that we must turn for indigenous Japanese thought, and in the volume before us we have a selection from that poetry rendered into graceful English verse."—Tablet.

"It is undoubtedly one of the best translations of lyric literature which has appeared during the close of the last year."—Celestial Empire.

"Mr. Chamberlain set himself a difficult task when he undertook to reproduce Japanese poetry in an English form. But he has evidently laboured con amore, and his efforts are successful to a degree."—London and China Express.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.—164, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE HISTORY OF ESARHADDON (Son of Sennacherib), KING OF ASSYRIA, B.C. 681-668.

Translated from the Cuneiform Inscriptions upon Cylinders and Tablets in the British Museum Collection; together with a Grammatical Analysis of each Word, Explanations of the Ideographs by Extracts from the Bi-Lingual Syllabaries, and List of Eponyms, &c.

By ERNEST A. BUDGE, B.A., M.R.A.S.,

Assyrian Exhibitioner, Christ's College, Cambridge.

"Students of scriptural archæology will also appreciate the 'History of Esarhaddon.'"—Times.

"There is much to attract the scholar in this volume. It does not pretend to popularise studies which are yet in their infancy. Its primary object is to translate, but it does not assume to be more than tentative, and it offers both to the professed Assyriologist and to the ordinary non-Assyriological Semitic scholar the means of controlling its results."—Academy.

"Mr. Budge's book is, of course, mainly addressed to Assyrian scholars and students. They are not, it is to be feared, a very numerous class. But the more thanks are due to him on that account for the way in which he has acquitted himself in his laborious task."—Tablet.

Post 8vo, pp. 448, cloth, price 21s.

THE MESNEVI

(Usually known as THE MESNEVIYI SHERIE, or HOLY MESNEVI)

OF

MEVLANA (OUR LORD) JELALU 'D-DIN MUHAMMED ER-RUMI.

Book the First.

Together with some Account of the Life and Acts of the Author, of his Ancestors, and of his Descendants.

Illustrated by a Selection of Characteristic Anecdotes, as Collected by their Historian,

MEVLANA SHEMSU-'D-DIN AHMED, EL EFLAKI, EL 'ARIFI.

Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English,

By JAMES W. REDHOUSE, M. R. A. S., &c.

"A complete treasury of occult Oriental lore."—Saturday Review.

"This book will be a very valuable help to the reader ignorant of Persia, who is desirous of obtaining an insight into a very important department of the literature extant in that language."—Tablet.

Post 8vo, pp. xvi.—280, cloth, price 6s.

EASTERN PROVERBS AND EMBLEMS

ILLUSTRATING OLD TRUTHS.

BY REV. J. LONG,

Member of the Bengal Asiatic Society, F.R.G.S.

“We regard the book as valuable, and wish for it a wide circulation and attentive reading.”—Record.

“Altogether, it is quite a feast of good things.”—Globe.

“It is full of interesting matter.”—Antiquary.

Post 8vo, pp. viii.—270, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

INDIAN POETRY ;

Containing a New Edition of the “Indian Song of Songs,” from the Sanscrit of the “Gita Govinda” of Jayadeva ; Two Books from “The Iliad of India” (Mahabharata), “Proverbial Wisdom” from the Shlokas of the Hitopadesa, and other Oriental Poems.

BY EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of “The Light of Asia.”

“In this new volume of Messrs. Trübner’s Oriental Series, Mr. Edwin Arnold does good service by illustrating, through the medium of his musical English melodies, the power of Indian poetry to stir European emotions. The ‘Indian Song of Songs’ is not unknown to scholars. Mr. Arnold will have introduced it among popular English poems. Nothing could be more graceful and delicate than the shades by which Krishna is portrayed in the gradual process of being weaned by the love of from the allurements of the forest nymphs, in whom the five senses are typified.”—Times.

‘Beautiful Radha, jasmine-bosomed Radha,’

“No other English poet has ever thrown his genius and his art so thoroughly into the work of translating Eastern ideas as Mr. Arnold has done in his splendid paraphrases of language contained in these mighty epics.”—Daily Telegraph.

“The poem abounds with imagery of Eastern luxuriousness and sensuousness ; the air seems laden with the spicy odours of the tropics, and the verse has a richness and a melody sufficient to captivate the senses of the dullest.”—Standard.

“The translator, while producing a very enjoyable poem, has adhered with tolerable fidelity to the original text.”—Overland Mail.

“We certainly wish Mr. Arnold success in his attempt ‘to popularise Indian classics,’ that being, as his preface tells us, the goal towards which he bends his efforts.”—Allen’s Indian Mail.

Post 8vo, pp. xvi.—296, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE MIND OF MENCIUS ;

OR, POLITICAL ECONOMY FOUNDED UPON MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

A SYSTEMATIC DIGEST OF THE DOCTRINES OF THE CHINESE PHILOSOPHER MENCIUS.

Translated from the Original Text and Classified, with Comments and Explanations,

By the REV. ERNST FABER, Rhenish Mission Society.

Translated from the German, with Additional Notes,

By the REV. A. B. HUTCHINSON, C.M.S., Church Mission, Hong Kong.

“Mr. Faber is already well known in the field of Chinese studies by his digest of the doctrines of Confucius. The value of this work will be perceived when it is remembered that at no time since relations commenced between China and the West has the former been so powerful—we had almost said aggressive—as now. For those who will give it careful study, Mr. Faber’s work is one of the most valuable of the excellent series to which it belongs.”—Nature.

Post 8vo, pp. 336, cloth, price 16s.

THE RELIGIONS OF INDIA.

By A. BARTH.

Translated from the French with the authority and assistance of the Author.

The author has, at the request of the publishers, considerably enlarged the work for the translator, and has added the literature of the subject to date; the translation may, therefore, be looked upon as an equivalent of a new and improved edition of the original.

"Is not only a valuable manual of the religions of India, which marks a distinct step in the treatment of the subject, but also a useful work of reference."—Academy.

"This volume is a reproduction, with corrections and additions, of an article contributed by the learned author two years ago to the 'Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses.' It attracted much notice when it first appeared, and is generally admitted to present the best summary extant of the vast subject with which it deals."—Tablet.

"This is not only on the whole the best but the only manual of the religions of India, apart from Buddhism, which we have in English. The present work . . . shows not only great knowledge of the facts and power of clear exposition, but also great insight into the inner history and the deeper meaning of the great religion for it is in reality only one, which it proposes to describe."—Modern Review.

"The merit of the work has been emphatically recognised by the most authoritative Orientalists, both in this country and on the continent of Europe. But probably there are few Indianists (if we may use the word) who would not derive a good deal of information from it, and especially from the extensive bibliography provided in the notes."—Dublin Review.

"Such a sketch M. Barth has drawn with a master-hand."—Critic (New York).

Post 8vo, pp. viii.—152, cloth, price 6s.

HINDU PHILOSOPHY.

THE SĀNKHYA KĀRIKA OF IS'WARA KRISHNA.

An Exposition of the System of Kapila, with an Appendix on the Nyāya and Vais'eshika Systems.

By JOHN DAVIES, M.A. (Cantab.), M.R.A.S.

The system of Kapila contains nearly all that India has produced in the department of pure philosophy.

"The non-Orientalist . . . finds in Mr. Davies a patient and learned guide who leads him into the intricacies of the philosophy of India, and supplies him with a clue that he may not be lost in them. In the preface he states that the system of Kapila is the 'earliest attempt on record to give an answer, from reason alone, to the mysterious questions which arise in every thoughtful mind about the origin of the world, the nature and relations of man and his future destiny,' and in his learned and able notes he exhibits 'the connection of the Sankhya system with the philosophy of Spinoza,' and 'the connection of the system of Kapila with that of Schopenhauer and Von Hartmann.'"—Foreign Church Chronicle.

"Mr. Davies's volume on Hindu Philosophy is an undoubted gain to all students of the development of thought. The system of Kapila, which is here given in a translation from the Sāṅkhya Kārikā, is the only contribution of India to pure philosophy. . . . Presents many points of deep interest to the student of comparative philosophy, and without Mr. Davies's lucid interpretation it would be difficult to appreciate these points in any adequate manner."—Saturday Review.

"We welcome Mr. Davies's book as a valuable addition to our philosophical library."—Notes and Queries.

Post 8vo, pp. x.—130, cloth, price 6s.

A MANUAL OF HINDU PANTHEISM. VEDÂNTASÂRA.

Translated, with copious Annotations,

BY MAJOR G. A. JACOB,

Bombay Staff Corps ; Inspector of Army Schools.

The design of this little work is to provide for missionaries, and for others who, like them, have little leisure for original research, an accurate summary of the doctrines of the Vedânta.

“The modest title of Major Jacob's work conveys but an inadequate idea of the vast amount of research embodied in his notes to the text of the Vedantasara. So copious, indeed, are these, and so much collateral matter do they bring to bear on the subject, that the diligent student will rise from their perusal with a fairly adequate view of Hindû philosophy generally. His work . . . is one of the best of its kind that we have seen.”—Calcutta Review.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.—154, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

TSUNI—II GOAM :

THE SUPREME BEING OF THE KHOI-KHOI.

BY THEOPHILUS HAHN, Ph.D.,

Custodian of the Grey Collection, Cape Town ; Corresponding Member of the Geogr. Society, Dresden ; Corresponding Member of the Anthropological Society, Vienna, &c., &c.

“The first instalment of Dr. Hahn's labours will be of interest, not at the Cape only, but in every University of Europe. It is, in fact, a most valuable contribution to the comparative study of religion and mythology. Accounts of their religion and mythology were scattered about in various books ; these have been carefully collected by Dr. Hahn and printed in his second chapter, enriched and improved by what he has been able to collect himself.”—Prof. Max Muller in the Nineteenth Century.

“It is full of good things.”—St. James's Gazette.

In Four Volumes. Post 8vo, Vol. I., pp. xii.—392, cloth, price 12s. 6d., Vol. II., pp. vi.—408, cloth, price 12s. 6d., Vol. III., pp. viii.—414, cloth, price 12s. 6d., Vol. IV., pp. viii.—340, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

A COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY TO THE QURAN.

TO WHICH IS PREFIXED SALE'S PRELIMINARY DISCOURSE, WITH ADDITIONAL NOTES AND EMENDATIONS.

Together with a Complete Index to the Text, Preliminary Discourse, and Notes.

By Rev. E. M. WHERRY, M.A., Lodiana.

“As Mr. Wherry's book is intended for missionaries in India, it is no doubt well that they should be prepared to meet, if they can, the ordinary arguments and interpretations, and for this purpose Mr. Wherry's additions will prove useful.”—Saturday Review.

Post 8vo, pp. vi.—208, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

THE BHAGAVAD-GÎTÂ.

Translated, with Introduction and Notes.

By JOHN DAVIES, M.A. (Cantab.)

“Let us add that his translation of the Bhagavad Gitâ is, as we judge, the best that has as yet appeared in English, and that his Philological Notes are of quite peculiar value.”—Dublin Review.

Post 8vo, pp. 96, cloth, price 5s.

THE QUATRAINS OF OMAR KHAYYAM.

Translated by E. H. WHINFIELD, M.A.,

Barrister-at-Law, late H.M. Bengal Civil Service.

Post 8vo, pp. xxxii.—336, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE QUATRAINS OF OMAR KHAYYAM.

The Persian Text, with an English Verse Translation.

By E. H. WHINFIELD, late of the Bengal Civil Service.

“Mr. Whinfield has executed a difficult task with considerable success, and his version contains much that will be new to those who only know Mr. Fitzgerald's delightful selection.”—Academy.

“The most prominent features in the Quatrains are their profound agnosticism, combined with a fatalism based more on philosophic than religious grounds, their Epicureanism and the spirit of universal tolerance and charity which animates them.”—Calcutta Review.

Post 8vo, pp. xxiv.—268, cloth, price 9s.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE UPANISHADS AND ANCIENT INDIAN METAPHYSICS.

As exhibited in a series of Articles contributed to the Calcutta Review.

By ARCHIBALD EDWARD GOUGH, M.A., Lincoln College, Oxford; Principal of the Calcutta Madrasa.

“For practical purposes this is perhaps the most important of the works that have thus far appeared in ‘Trübner's Oriental Series.’ . . . We cannot doubt that for all who may take it up the work must be one of profound interest.”—Saturday Review.

In Two Volumes. Vol. I., post 8vo, pp. xxiv.—230, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

A COMPARATIVE HISTORY OF THE EGYPTIAN AND MESOPOTAMIAN RELIGIONS.

By DR. C. P. TIELE.

Vol. I.—HISTORY OF THE EGYPTIAN RELIGION.

Translated from the Dutch with the Assistance of the Author.

By JAMES BALLINGAL.

“It places in the hands of the English readers a history of Egyptian Religion which is very complete, which is based on the best materials, and which has been illustrated by the latest results of research. In this volume there is a great deal of information, as well as independent investigation, for the trustworthiness of which Dr. Tiele's name is in itself a guarantee; and the description of the successive religions under the Old Kingdom, the Middle Kingdom, and the New Kingdom, is given in a manner which is scholarly and minute.”—Scotsman.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.—302, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

YUSUF AND ZULAIKHA.

A POEM BY JAMI.

Translated from the Persian into English Verse.

By RALPH T. H. GRIFFITH.

“Mr. Griffith, who has done already good service as translator into verse from the Sanskrit, has done further good work in this translation from the Persian, and he has evidently shown not a little skill in his rendering the quaint and very oriental style of his author into our more prosaic, less figurative, language. . . . The work, besides its intrinsic merits, is of importance as being one of the most popular and famous poems of Persia, and that which is read in all the independent native schools of India where Persian is taught.”—Scotsman.

Post 8vo, pp. viii.—266, cloth, price 9s.

LINGUISTIC ESSAYS.

By CARL ABEL.

“An entirely novel method of dealing with philosophical questions and impart a real human interest to the otherwise dry technicalities of the science.”—Standard.

“Dr. Abel is an opponent from whom it is pleasant to differ, for he writes with enthusiasm and temper, and his mastery over the English language fits him to be a champion of unpopular doctrines.”—Athenæum.

Post 8vo, pp. ix.—281, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE SARVA - DARSANA - SAMGRAHA ;

OR, REVIEW OF THE DIFFERENT SYSTEMS OF HINDU PHILOSOPHY.

By MADHAVA ACHARYA.

Translated by E. B. COWELL, M.A., Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Cambridge, and A. E. GOUGH, M.A., Professor of Philosophy in the Presidency College, Calcutta.

This work is an interesting specimen of Hindu critical ability. The author successively passes in review the sixteen philosophical systems current in the fourteenth century in the South of India ; and he gives what appears to him to be their most important tenets.

“The translation is trustworthy throughout. A protracted sojourn in India, where there is a living tradition, has familiarised the translators with Indian thought.”—Athenæum.

Post 8vo, pp. lxx.—368, cloth, price 14s.

TIBETAN TALES DERIVED FROM INDIAN SOURCES.

Translated from the Tibetan of the KAH-GYUR.

By F. ANTON VON SCHIEFNER.

Done into English from the German, with an Introduction,

By W. R. S. RALSTON, M.A.

“Mr. Ralston, whose name is so familiar to all lovers of Russian folk-lore, has supplied some interesting Western analogies and parallels, drawn, for the most part, from Slavonic sources, to the Eastern folk-tales, culled from the Kahgyur, one of the divisions of the Tibetan sacred books.”—Academy.

“The translation . . . could scarcely have fallen into better hands. An Introduction . . . gives the leading facts in the lives of those scholars who have given their attention to gaining a knowledge of the Tibetan literature and language.”—Calcutta Review.

“Ought to interest all who care for the East, for amusing stories, or for comparative folk-lore.”—Pall Mall Gazette.

Post 8vo, pp. xvi.—224, cloth, price 9s.

UDÂNAVARGA.

A COLLECTION OF VERSES FROM THE BUDDHIST CANON.

Compiled by DHARMATRÂTA.

BEING THE NORTHERN BUDDHIST VERSION OF DHAMMAPADA.

Translated from the Tibetan of Bkah-hgyur, with Notes, and Extracts from the Commentary of Pradjuavarman,

By W. WOODVILLE ROCKHILL.

“ Mr. Rockhill's present work is the first from which assistance will be gained for a more accurate understanding of the Pali text; it is, in fact, as yet the only term of comparison available to us. The ‘Udanavarga,’ the Thibetan version, was originally discovered by the late M. Schiefner, who published the Tibetan text, and had intended adding a translation, an intention frustrated by his death, but which has been carried out by Mr. Rockhill. . . . Mr. Rockhill may be congratulated for having well accomplished a difficult task.”—Saturday Review.

In Two Volumes, post 8vo, pp. xxiv.—566, cloth, accompanied by a Language Map, price 25s.

A SKETCH OF THE MODERN LANGUAGES OF AFRICA.

By ROBERT NEEDHAM CUST,

Barrister-at-Law, and late of Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service.

“ Any one at all interested in African languages cannot do better than get Mr. Cust's book. It is encyclopædic in its scope, and the reader gets a start clear away in any particular language, and is left free to add to the initial sum of knowledge there collected.”—Natal Mercury.

“ Mr. Cust has contrived to produce a work of value to linguistic students.”—Nature.

Third Edition. Post 8vo, pp. xv.—250, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

OUTLINES OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGION TO THE SPREAD OF THE UNIVERSAL RELIGIONS.

By C. P. TIELE,

Doctor of Theology, Professor of the History of Religions in the University of Leyden.

Translated from the Dutch by J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

“ Few books of its size contain the result of so much wide thinking, able and laborious study, or enable the reader to gain a better bird's-eye view of the latest results of investigations into the religious history of nations. As Professor Tiele modestly says, ‘ In this little book are outlines—pencil sketches, I might say—nothing more.’ But there are some men whose sketches from a thumb-nail are of far more worth than an enormous canvas covered with the crude painting of others, and it is easy to see that these pages, full of information, these sentences, cut and perhaps also dry, short and clear, condense the fruits of long and thorough research.”—Scotsman.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.—312, with Maps and Plan, cloth, price 14s.

A HISTORY OF BURMA.

Including Burma Proper, Pegu, Taungu, Tenasserim, and Arakan. From the Earliest Time to the End of the First War with British India.

BY LIEUT.-GEN. SIR ARTHUR P. PHAYRE, G.C.M.G., K.C.S.I., and C.B., Membre Correspondant de la Société Académique Indo-Chinoise de France.

“Sir Arthur Phayre's contribution to Trübner's Oriental Series supplies a recognised want, and its appearance has been looked forward to for many years. . . . General Phayre deserves great credit for the patience and industry which has resulted in this History of Burma.”—Saturday Review.

Third Edition. Post 8vo, pp. 276, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

RELIGION IN CHINA.

By JOSEPH EDKINS, D.D., PEKING.

Containing a Brief Account of the Three Religions of the Chinese, with Observations on the Prospects of Christian Conversion amongst that People.

“Dr. Edkins has been most careful in noting the varied and often complex phases of opinion, so as to give an account of considerable value of the subject.”—Scotsman.

“As a missionary, it has been part of Dr. Edkins' duty to study the existing religions in China, and his long residence in the country has enabled him to acquire an intimate knowledge of them as they at present exist.”—Saturday Review.

“Dr. Edkins' valuable work, of which this is a second and revised edition, has, from the time that it was published, been the standard authority upon the subject of which it treats.”—Nonconformist.

“Dr. Edkins . . . may now be fairly regarded as among the first authorities on Chinese religion and language.”—British Quarterly Review.

Post 8vo, pp. x.—274, cloth, price 9s.

THE LIFE OF THE BUDDHA AND THE EARLY HISTORY OF HIS ORDER.

Derived from Tibetan Works in the Bkash-hgyur and Bstan-hgyur.

Followed by notices on the Early History of Tibet and Khoten.

Translated by W. W. ROCKHILL, Second Secretary U.S. Legation in China.

“The volume bears testimony to the diligence and fulness with which the author has consulted and tested the ancient documents bearing upon his remarkable subject.”—Times.

“Will be appreciated by those who devote themselves to those Buddhist studies which have of late years taken in these Western regions so remarkable a development. Its matter possesses a special interest as being derived from ancient Tibetan works, some portions of which, here analysed and translated, have not yet attracted the attention of scholars. The volume is rich in ancient stories bearing upon the world's renovation and the origin of castes, as recorded in these venerable authorities.”—Daily News.

Third Edition. Post 8vo, pp. viii.—464, cloth, price 16s.

THE SANKHYA APHORISMS OF KAPILA,

With Illustrative Extracts from the Commentaries.

Translated by J. R. BALLANTYNE, LL.D., late Principal of the Benares College.

Edited by FITZEDWARD HALL.

“The work displays a vast expenditure of labour and scholarship, for which students of Hindoo philosophy have every reason to be grateful to Dr. Hall and the publishers.”—Calcutta Review.

In Two Volumes, post 8vo, pp. cviii.-242, and viii.-370, cloth, price 24s.

Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

BUDDHIST RECORDS OF THE WESTERN WORLD,

Translated from the Chinese of Hiuen Tsiang (A.D. 629).

By SAMUEL BEAL, B.A.,

(Trin. Coll., Camb.) ; R.N. (Retired Chaplain and N.I.) ; Professor of Chinese, University College, London ; Rector of Wark, Northumberland, &c.

An eminent Indian authority writes respecting this work:—"Nothing more can be done in elucidating the History of India until Mr. Beal's translation of the 'Si-yu-ki' appears."

"It is a strange freak of historical preservation that the best account of the condition of India at that ancient period has come down to us in the books of travel written by the Chinese pilgrims, of whom Hwen Thsang is the best known."—Times.

Post 8vo, pp. xlviii.-398, cloth, price 12s.

THE ORDINANCES OF MANU.

Translated from the Sanskrit, with an Introduction.

By the late A. C. BURNELL, Ph.D., C.I.E.

Completed and Edited by E. W. HOPKINS, Ph.D., of Columbia College, N.Y.

"This work is full of interest ; while for the student of sociology and the science of religion it is full of importance. It is a great boon to get so notable a work in so accessible a form, admirably edited, and competently translated."—Scotsman.

"Few men were more competent than Burnell to give us a really good translation of this well-known law book, first rendered into English by Sir William Jones. Burnell was not only an independent Sanskrit scholar, but an experienced lawyer, and he joined to these two important qualifications the rare faculty of being able to express his thoughts in clear and trenchant English. . . . We ought to feel very grateful to Dr. Hopkins for having given us all that could be published of the translation left by Burnell."—F. MAX MÜLLER in the Academy.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.-234, cloth, price 9s.

THE LIFE AND WORKS OF ALEXANDER CSOMA DE KOROS,

Between 1819 and 1842. With a Short Notice of all his Published and Unpublished Works and Essays. From Original and for most part Unpublished Documents.

By THEODORE DUKA, M.D., F.R.C.S. (Eng.), Surgeon-Major
H.M.'s Bengal Medical Service, Retired, &c.

"Not too soon have Messrs. Trübner added to their valuable Oriental Series a history of the life and works of one of the most gifted and devoted of Oriental students, Alexander Csoma de Keros. It is forty-three years since his death, and though an account of his career was demanded soon after his decease, it has only now appeared in the important memoir of his compatriot, Dr. Duka."—Bookseller.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS RELATING TO INDO-CHINA—continued.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.

XXXV.—Catalogue of Mammalia inhabiting the Malayan Peninsula and Islands.
By Theodore Cantor, M.D.

XXXVI.—On the Local and Relative Geology of Singapore. By J. R. Logan.

XXXVII.—Catalogue of Reptiles inhabiting the Malayan Peninsula and Islands.
By Theodore Cantor, M.D.

XXXVIII.—Some Account of the Botanical Collection brought from the Eastward, in 1841, by Dr. Cantor. By the late W. Griffith.

XXXIX.—On the Flat-Horned Taurine Cattle of S.E. Asia. By E. Blyth.

XL.—Note, by Major-General G. B. Tremeneere.

General Index.

Index of Vernacular Terms.

Index of Zoological Genera and Sub-Genera occurring in Vol. II.

“The papers treat of almost every aspect of Indo-China—its philology, economy, geography, geology—and constitute a very material and important contribution to our accessible information regarding that country and its people.”—Contemporary Review.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.-72, cloth, price 5s.

THE SATAKAS OF BHARTRIHARI.

Translated from the Sanskrit

By the REV. B. HALE WORTHAM, M.R.A.S.,

Rector of Eggesford, North Devon.

“A very interesting addition to Trübner's Oriental Series.”—Saturday Review.

“Many of the Maxims in the book have a Biblical ring and beauty of expression.”
—St. James' Gazette.

Post 8vo, pp. xii.-180, cloth, price 6s.

ANCIENT PROVERBS AND MAXIMS FROM BURMESE SOURCES;

OR, THE NITI LITERATURE OF BURMA.

BY JAMES GRAY,

Author of “Elements of Pali Grammar,” “Translation of the Dhammapada,” &c.

The Sanscrit-Pâli word Niti is equivalent to “conduct” in its abstract, and “guide” in its concrete signification. As applied to books, it is a general term for a treatise which includes maxims, pithy sayings, and didactic stories, intended as a guide to such matters of every-day life as form the character of an individual and influence him in his relations to his fellow-men. Treatises of this kind have been popular in all ages, and have served as a most effective medium of instruction.

Post 8vo, pp. xxxii. and 330, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

MASNAVI I MA' NAVI:

THE SPIRITUAL COUPLETS OF MAULANA JALALU-'D-DIN
MUHAMMAD I RUMI.

Translated and Abridged by E. H. WHINFIELD, M.A., Late of H.M. Bengal Civil Service.

Post 8vo, pp. viii. and 346, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

MANAVA-DHARMA-CASTRA:
THE CODE OF MANU.

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXT, WITH CRITICAL NOTES.
By J. JOLLY, Ph.D.,

Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Wurzburg ; late Tagore Professor of Law in the University of Calcutta.

The date assigned by Sir William Jones to this Code—the well-known Great Law Book of the Hindus—is 1250–500 B.C., although the rules and precepts contained in it had probably existed as tradition for countless ages before. There has been no reliable edition of the Text for Students for many years past, and it is believed, therefore, that Prof. Jolly's work will supply a want long felt.

Post 8vo, pp. 215, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

LEAVES FROM MY CHINESE SCRAP-BOOK.

By FREDERIC HENRY BALFOUR.

Author of "Waifs and Strays from the Far East," "Taoist Texts,"
"Idiomatic Phrases in the Peking Colloquial," &c. &c.

Post 8vo, pp. xvi.–548, with Six Maps, cloth, price 21s.

LINGUISTIC AND ORIENTAL ESSAYS.

WRITTEN FROM THE YEAR 1847 TO 1887. Second Series.

By ROBERT NEEDHAM CUST, LL.D.,

Barrister-at-Law ; Honorary Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society ;
Late Member of Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service.

In Two Volumes, post 8vo, pp. x.–308 and vi.–314, cloth, price 25s.

MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS RELATING TO INDO-CHINA.

Edited by R. ROST, Ph.D., &c. &c.,
Librarian to the India Office.

SECOND SERIES.

Reprinted for the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society from the Malayan "Miscellanies," the "Transactions and Journal" of the Batavian Society," and the "Journals" of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and the Royal Geographical and Royal Asiatic Societies.

THE FOLLOWING WORKS ARE IN PREPARATION:—

In Two Vols., post 8vo.

ALBERUNI'S INDIA:

AN ACCOUNT OF ITS RELIGION, PHILOSOPHY, LITERATURE, GEOGRAPHY, CHRONOLOGY, ASTRONOMY, CUSTOMS, LAW,
AND ASTROLOGY (ABOUT A.D. 1031).

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH.

With Notes and Indices by Prof. EDWARD SACHAU, University of Berlin.

* * The Arabic Original, with an Index of the Sanskrit Words, Edited by Professor SACHAU, is in the press.

Post 8vo.

THE LIFE OF HIUEN TSIANG.

BY THE SHAMANS HWUI LI AND YEN-TSUNG.

With a Preface containing an account of the Works of I-TSING.

By SAMUEL BEAL, B.A.

(Trin. Coll., Camb.); Professor of Chinese, University College, London; Rector of Wark, Northumberland, &c.

Author of "Buddhist Records of the Western World," "The Romantic Legend of Sakya Budda," &c.

When the Pilgrim Hinen Tsiang returned from his travels in India, he took up his abode in the Temple of "Great Benevolence;" this convent had been constructed by the Emperor in honour of the Empress, Wen-te-hau. After Hiuen Tsiang's death, his disciple, Hwui Li, composed a work which gave an account of his illustrious Master's travels; this work when he completed he buried, and refused to discover its place of concealment. But previous to his death he revealed its whereabouts to Yen-tsung, by whom it was finally revised and published. This is "The Life of Hiuen Tsiang." It is a valuable sequel to the Si-yu-ki, correcting and illustrating it in many particulars.

Post 8vo.

A SKETCH OF THE MODERN LANGUAGES OF OCEANIA.

By R. N. CUST, LL.D.

Author of "Modern Languages of the East," "Modern Languages of Africa," &c.

Post 8vo.

ESSAYS ON THE INTERCOURSE OF THE CHINESE WITH WESTERN COUNTRIES IN THE MIDDLE AGES AND ON KINDRED SUBJECTS.

By E. BRETSCHNEIDER, M.D.,

Formerly Physician of the Russian Legation at Peking.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., 57 AND 59 LUDGATE HILL.

TRÜBNER'S
ORIENTAL SERIES.

II.

Ballantyne Press.
BALLANTYNE, HANSON AND CO.
EDINBURGH AND LONDON

TEXTS

FROM

THE BUDDHIST CANON,

COMMONLY KNOWN AS

DHAMMAPADA,

WITH ACCOMPANYING NARRATIVES.

Translated from the Chinese

BY

SAMUEL BEAL

(B.A. TRIN. COLL. CAMB.)

PROFESSOR OF CHINESE, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON

LONDON:

TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

1878.

[All rights reserved.]

4597
1579/00

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

C O N T E N T S.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTORY REMARKS	I
PREFACE	3-27
CHINESE PREFACE	29-30
I. IMPERMANENCY	31
II. INCITING TO WISDOM	39
III. THE DISCIPLE	44
IV. SIMPLE FAITH	50
V. CAREFUL OBSERVANCE OF MORAL DUTIES	53
VI. REFLECTION	55
VII. LOVE	57
VIII. WORDS	60
IX. TWIN VERSES	62
X. CARELESSNESS	69
XI. THOUGHT	72
XII. FLOWERS	74
XIII. THE FOOL	77
XIV. THE WISE MAN	79
XV. THE RAHAT	82
XVI. THE THOUSANDS	84
XVII. EVIL CONDUCT	91
XVIII. PUNISHMENT	94
XIX. OLD AGE	99
XX. LOVING THE BODY	103

	PAGE
XXI. THE WORLD	107
XXII. BUDDHA	109
XXIII. REST AND REPOSE	114
XXIV. PLEASURE	118
XXV. ANGER	121
XXVI. IMPURITY	124
XXVII. FIRMLY HOLDING THE LAW	126
XXVIII. THE WAY	130
XXIX. WIDE AND DIFFUSIVE	134
XXX. HELL	139
XXXI. THE ELEPHANT	142
XXXII. LUST	147
XXXIII. ADVANTAGEOUS SERVICE	158
XXXIV. THE SHAMAN	161
XXXV. THE BRAHMÂCHARIN	163
XXXVI. NIRVÂNA	165
XXXVII. BIRTH AND DEATH	167
XXXVIII. PROFIT OF RELIGION	170
XXXIX. GOOD FORTUNE	174

* * [In the section No. XXXI. will be found the sermon preached by Buddha to his son Râhula on "Falsehood." This sermon or exhortation is alluded to by Aṣoka in the Edict of Bhabra.]

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

DHAMMAPADA (which, according to the Chinese Gloss, may be rendered “Scriptural Texts” or “Verses”) is a work of much importance in the study of Buddhism. It contains, as its title signifies, authentic Texts gathered from ancient canonical books—and these Texts are generally connected with some incident or other in the History of Buddha, helping to illustrate everyday life in India at the time when they were written, as well as the method of teaching adopted by the Founder of this remarkable Religion. Not only does the general tone pervading these verses illustrate the spirit of Buddha’s doctrine,¹ but by a critical examination of particular passages, we are enabled to solve some of the difficulties which always attend the interpretation of words and phrases used in a religious sense. We already possess two translations of this work from the Pâli,—one by V. Fausböll (1855), the other by Max Müller (1870)²—and in addition to these there are the criticisms of Mr. James D’Alwis and the late Professor Childers on the latter translation—so that for all necessary purposes we have sufficient material before us for a correct knowledge of the work in question. I should not under these circumstances have undertaken to produce another translation bearing the same title, but for the fact that no copy of Dhammapada has hitherto been known to exist in China. It has been my good fortune to have had brought under my immediate examination the great body of books comprising the Chinese Buddhist Canon. Amongst these I found there were four copies of a work bearing the title of “Law verses” or “Scriptural texts,” which on examination were seen to resemble the Pâli version of Dhammapada in many particulars. Supposing that some knowledge of these books would be acceptable to the student, I have undertaken the translation¹ of the simplest of them, and with such notices of the other copies as are suggested by a brief comparison of them one with the other, I now offer my book for candid consideration.

¹ Mr. Spence Hardy has observed that a collection might be made from the precepts of this work, that in the purity of its ethics could scarcely be equalled from any other heathen author.—“Eastern Monachism,” 169

² Mr. Gogerly has also translated 350 verses of Dhammapada (out of 423).—Spence Hardy, “E. M.” p. 28. [A. Weber’s German translation appeared in 1860.]

¹ It may here be stated, in order to disarm unfriendly criticism, that I do not profess to have produced a literal translation of the Chinese Text, but only such an abstract of it as seemed necessary for my purpose.

PREFACE

TO THE

CHINESE VERSION OF DHAMMAPADA.

THERE are four principal copies of Dhammapada in Chinese. The first, approaching most nearly to the Pâli, was made by a Shaman “Wei-chi-lan” (and others), who lived during the Wu dynasty, about the beginning of the third century of the Christian era. As this is the earliest version, we will consider it first.

The title by which it is known is Fa-kheu-King,¹ that is, “The Sûtra of Law Verses.” The symbol kheu (句) does not necessarily mean “a verse,” but is applied to any sentence or phrase: the rendering “Law texts” or “Scripture texts” would therefore be more correct were it not that in the Preface to this work the symbol is explained by “Gâthâ,” which is stated by Childers (sub voce) to mean “a verse or stanza,” or generally “a çloka or anushtubh stanza.” Nothing can be more precise than the language of the Chinese Preface (to which I have alluded in the “Report on the Catalogue of the Chinese Tripitaka,” p. 113), in which it is stated that the work we are considering is the “Tan-po-kěě,” 曇鉢偈, which can only be restored to Dharmagâthâpadaṃ, and as gâthâpadam is used for “a stanza,” we come back to the meaning of “Scripture, or Law-stanzas." Of course, the Chinese affords no assistance in solving the question "whether 'pada,' in the singular, can ever mean a collection of verses,"¹ and the other difficulties attaching to the correct rendering of this word from the Pâli; but as an independent testimony to the sense of the expression "Dhammapada," as it was understood by the old translators in China, it may be of value.² The Preface further explains that these verses are "choice selections from all the Sûtras," which agrees with what we know from actual comparison, as also from the testimony of independent writers.³ The Chinese Sûtras, e.g., contain many passages found in Dhammapada—compare the following, p. 49: "As the bee collects nectar and departs without injuring the flower or its colour and scent, so let the sage dwell upon earth," with Catena, p. 150, "As the butterfly alights on the flower and destroys not its form or its sweetness, but takes a sip and then departs, so the mendicant follower of Buddha (sage) takes not nor hurts another's possessions." And the stanza following this (No. 50) is but a part of the same traditional record as coming from a former Buddha (Wessabha): "Not the failure of others, nor their sins of commission or omission, but his own misdeeds and negligences should the sage take notice of." So in the Chinese: "He observes not another man's actions or omissions, looks only to his own behaviour and conduct." (Op. cit., p. 159.) Again, let us compare v. 183 with the Chinese record of Konagamana Buddha (Catena, 159),

¹ In the Encyclopædia “Chi-yuen-fă-pao-khân-tung-tsung-lu” (Kiouen xi. fol. 3¹), this work is also quoted as “Fă-tsah,” i.e., “Scriptural Miscellanies.”

¹ But we must remember the remark of the translator of "Sutta Nipâta," that in old Pâli works the singular is frequently used for the plural.—"Sutta Nipâta," by Sir N. Coomâra Swami. Introd. xix. (Trübner & Co.)

² It may be as well to state, however, that the word "pada" is in various compounds rendered by "traces," or "vestigia," in the Chinese, such, for example, as in the word "Kari-pada-deva" (elephantis vestigia habens deus.—"Jul. Méthode," p. 71), where "pada" is equal to the Chinese "tsi," which means "a trace," or, "footstep." (For other examples, vide the Chinese version of the "Lotus," compared with that by Burnouf, p. 155. Also "Jul. Hiouen Thsang," iii. p. 498, &c.)

³ Mr. James D'Alwis, for example, in his "Review of Max Müller's Dhammapada," pp. 92, 93, ss., and elsewhere.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

assertion of the Great Teacher, if a male or female disciple should commit either of the unpardonable sins, he or she, nevertheless, shall not be cast into hell. World-honoured One! how can this be, that such a disciple shall escape though guilty of such sins?' To whom Buddha replied, 'Mahâmati! attend, and weigh my words well! What are these five unpardonable sins of which you speak? They are these, to slay father or mother, to wound a Rahat, to offend (i.e., to place a stumbling-block in the way of) the members of the sañgha (church), to draw the blood from the body of a Buddha. Mahâmati! say, then, how a man committing these sins can be guiltless? In this way;—is not Love (Taṇhâ) which covets pleasure more and more, and so produces 'birth'—is not this the mother (mâtâ) of all? And is not 'ignorance' (avidyâ) the father (pitâ) of all? To destroy these two, then, is to slay father and mother. And again, to cut off and destroy those ten 'kleshas' (Ch. shi) which like the rat, or the secret poison, work invisibly, and to get rid of all the consequences of these faults (i.e., to destroy all material associations), this is to wound a Rahat. And so to cause offence and overthrow a church or assembly, what is this but to separate entirely the connection of the five skandhas? ('five aggregates,' which is the same word as that used above for the 'Church.') And again, to draw the blood of a Buddha, what is this but to wound and get rid of the seven-fold body by the three methods of escape. (The seven-fold body, literally 'the body with seven kinds of knowledge'—the number seven in this connection evidently runs parallel with the seven Buddhas, whose blood is supposed to be spilt; the three methods of escape are the same as the three 'yânas,' or vehicles; viz., Srâvakas, Bodhisatwas, Buddhas). Thus it is, Mahâmati, the holy male or female disciple may slay father and mother, wound a Rahat, overthrow the assembly, draw the blood of Buddha, and yet escape the punishment of the lowest hell (avîchi). And in order to explain and enforce this more fully, the World-honoured One added the following stanzas :—

‘ Lust, or carnal desire, this is the Mother,
 “ Ignorance,” this is the Father,
 The highest point of knowledge, this is Buddha,
 All the “ Kleshas ” these are the Rahats,
 The five Skandhas, these are the Priests,
 To commit the five unpardonable sins
 Is to destroy these five
 And yet not suffer the pains of hell.’ ”

These comparisons will be sufficient to show the plan of the work under consideration, and to confirm the statement of the writer of the preface, “ that these stanzas are but choice selections from the various Sûtras.”¹ We shall now understand the remark that “ there are various arrangements or editions of the Dhammapada ” (Chinese Preface), for it seems plain that these selections from the canonical books were not made at any one time, or generally accepted in their present form, until a much later period than the compilation of the Sûtras themselves. The language of the Preface is equally distinct on this point, “ It was from these works, viz., the Canonical Scriptures, that the Shamans in after ages copied out various Gâthâs, some of four lines, and some of six lines,² and attached to each set of verses a title according to the subject therein explained.” We may thus account for the various editions of the work which exist in China, compiled from original versions in India, shewing that there existed in that country also not one, but several copies of these “ excerpts.” We must accept Dhammapada then in its present form, simply as a redaction made at an early period from canonical books, for the purpose of ready reference, or as a religious “ vade-mecum.”

¹ Which Sûtras form the second of the three baskets of the Buddhist Canon.

² These lines probably correspond to those named by Spence Hardy,—(Eastern Monach, p. 28).

The Chinese copies of this work, without exception, refer its first arrangement to the venerable Dharmatrâta¹ (vid. Julien, sub voce Fă-k'ieou, iii. p. 441). The difficulty is to find out when Dharmatrâta lived. He was certainly the author of the Samyuktâbhidharma Shaster—but although the Chinese version of this book is before me, it gives no clue to the time in which its author flourished. Burnouf (Introduction, pp. 566, 567) alludes to the Sthavira Dharmatrâta, otherwise Bhadanta Dharmatrâta, as one of the most illustrious of the earliest Apostles of Buddhism. But there is much confusion in the whole matter. Whether Sthavira Dharmatrâta is a different personage from Bhadanta Dharmatrâta, and when either of them lived is not explained. Suffice it to say, that the author of Dhammapada is all along spoken of in our Chinese books as “Tsun-che-fă-k'ieou,” that is, Ārya Dharmatrâta, and in the preface to the “Ch'uh-yau-king” he is said to have been the uncle of “Po-su-meh,” i.e., Vasumitra. If this patriarch be the one “who took a principal part in the last revision of the Canon, as the President of the Synod under Kanishka” (Eitel, sub voce, Vasumitra), then we have fair ground for assigning him an approximate date. Kanishka we assume to have reigned about 40 B.C., and if so, then Dharmatrâta may with much probability be placed some thirty years earlier—or about 70 B.C.

The question to be considered now is whether it is likely that a book compiled at this date would have gained such authority as to be accepted as semi-canonical by the numerous translators who flocked to China some two or three hundred years afterwards. (We dismiss for the present the consideration of the relation of this work to that known in the South.) Considering the wonderful

¹ According to Târanâtha, Dharmatrâta was cotemporary with the Brahman Râhula; he, with Ghoshaka, Vasumitra, and Buddhadeva, were the four great Āchâryas of the Vaib-

hâshikas. He distinguishes this Bhadanta Dh. from another Dh., who collected the Udânavarga. (Schiefer's German transl., p. 68.)

impetus given to Buddhist research at the time alluded to, there can be no difficulty in accepting this position. The writings of Asaṅgha, Vasubandhu, Nâgârjuna, Vasumitra, and others who lived during the first century B.C., are accepted in the Northern School of Buddhism as authoritative. They have just that weight and character which works written by those called "Fathers of the Christian Church" have in Christendom. In the Chinese Tripitaka there is no effort to conceal the human composition of these books. On the title page of every Shaster the author's name is given—they are called "Sûtras" or "Shasters"—but yet with the plain intimation that they were drawn up by men who lived long after the age of what we should call "inspiration." If, then, these other writers are regarded with reverence, equally so we may assume was the author of the present work. In any case it is of importance that we have here provided for us a definite assertion as to Dhammapada, with respect to its date and author—about which the Southern Records, beyond the general assignation of this work to a portion of the canon, affirm nothing.

It now remains to consider what reliance may be placed generally on these Chinese versions of the Sacred Books of the Buddhists. At the very outset of this consideration we observe that they were made, if not by, yet under the immediate direction of, Indian priests. It would be as incorrect to refer the originals of the Christian Scriptures now used in China to native writers, as to make the Buddhist books found there a part of the native literature. Buddhism was brought to China by missionaries from India, and the books forming the canon (except where expressly named as Chinese) are translations made by those men from some Indian vernacular. This leads to another remark in correction of an oft-repeated assertion that Chinese Buddhist books are all translations of Sanskrit works found in Nipal. It is so plain to any one conversant with the subject that such is not the case, that any lengthened remarks on the point seem to be unnecessary. We have already in English a translation of the Pâtimokkham, or, as it is known in Sanscrit, the Prâtimoksha, from the Chinese; and this version is found to agree accurately (except in some additions of a later date) with the translation from the Pâli by Mr. Gogerly. Then again, we have the Samajâtaka in Chinese, agreeing in the main with the Pâli; the Brahmajâla Sûtra (Case lxxvii. Catalogue); the Parinirvâna Sûtra (do.); the Sigâlovâda (do.); the Sârdûla Karna Sûtra (Case xxxii.), and many others, which from internal evidence we may certainly conclude were not translated from Sanscrit. And that this is so, is corroborated by the fact that many of the Buddhist books known in China were brought immediately to that country from Ceylon by Fa-hien, and translated into Chinese directly from the sacred language of that country. But before the time of Fa-hien there had been a continuous migration of Indian priests into China, who brought with them books from Northern and Central India, written, therefore, in the dialects of those countries, and which were from them carefully translated.¹ These remarks will be sufficient to correct the mistake alluded to without going into further particulars. Nor would even so much have been necessary if the statements as to the character of Chinese Buddhist translations had not been endorsed by some leading scholars of the time. Take, for example, the remark of Professor Childers ("Contemporary Review," February 1876), that "the Northern books (so-called), [which of course include the Chinese,] are of as little value for a critical examination of Buddhism, as works found in Abyssinia bearing on the Christian religion would be for an exact acquaintance with Christianity." It is plain, however, that the Buddhist works in China are of great value for an exact knowledge of that religion, because they are faithful versions of works everywhere known in India, not only during the early period of its history, but also throughout its development—or, to put it into plain figures, the books found in China afford us a consecutive catena of writings dating from at least 100 B.C. to 600 A.D., that is, during a period of 700 years. More than this can scarcely be desired for a perfect study of any religious system.

¹ In the present work we have the Sanscrit, "Grîdhraakûta," "Râja-gîha," "Râjagaha," "Sâvatthî," &c., to represent the forms, "Gijjhakûto," "Râjagaha," "Sâvatthî," &c., to represent the

We come now to a comparison of this earliest translation with that from the Pâli. The Fă-kheu-king contains thirty-nine chapters against the twenty-six of the Southern edition, and 760¹ stanzas against 423. We are told, however, in the preface that the original work consisted of twenty-six chapters and 500 stanzas; and as in Buddhist calculations the next highest round number is frequently used to denote the exact number intended, we have in this statement sufficient evidence to show that the original from which our translation was made consisted of the same chapters, and probably the same number of verses, as that known in the South—in other words, that they were identical. If so, the question arises, Who added the thirteen additional sections? It would appear from the wording of the preface that this was the work of the Indian missionary (or refugee) Tsiang-im, who added these sections after due consultation [tsze wan], taking care to verify them from ancient sources. If this be so (the passage is confessedly obscure), it would lead us to suppose that the original manuscript brought to China was the same as that known in Ceylon, the differences which occur between the two being attributable to special reasons existing at the time of the translation.

¹ In the preface it is stated that there are only 752 stanzas. The difference between this and the sum of the headings of each chapter must be accidental. It is curious that a similar discrepancy occurs in the Pâli summary of stanzas—there are five verses more in the text than in the index in that version, and in the Chinese eight more (Vide Max Müller's Dh. ix. n.)

I will now proceed to give a tabular statement of the chapters and verses which compose the Chinese and Pâli versions respectively, so as to render a comparison of the two easy:—

CHINESE.			PÂLI.
Title of Chapter.		No. of Verses.	Title of Chapter.		No. of Verses.
1. Impermanence . . .		21
2. Inciting to Wisdom . . .		29
3. The Srâvaka . . .		19
4. Simple Faith . . .		18
5. Observance of Duty . . .		16
6. Reflection . . .		12
7. Loving Kindness . . .		19
8. Conversation . . .		12
9. Twin Verses . . .		22	1. Twin Verses . . .		20
10. Carelessness . . .		20	2. Reflection . . .		12
11. Thought . . .		12	3. Thought . . .		11
12. Flowers . . .		17	4. Flowers . . .		16
13. The Fool . . .		21	5. The Fool . . .		16
14. The Wise Man . . .		17	6. The Wise Man . . .		14
15. The Rahat . . .		10	7. The Venerable . . .		10
16. The Thousands . . .		16	8. The Thousands . . .		16
17. Evil Conduct . . .		22	9. Evil . . .		13
18. Punishment . . .		14	10. Punishment . . .		17
19. Old Age . . .		14	11. Old Age . . .		11
20. Self Love . . .		14	12. Self . . .		10
21. The World . . .		14	13. The World . . .		12
22. Buddha . . .		21	14. The Awakened . . .		18
23. Rest and Repose . . .		14	15. Happiness . . .		12
24. Pleasure . . .		12	16. Pleasure . . .		12
25. Anger . . .		26	17. Anger . . .		14
26. Impurity . . .		19	18. Impurity . . .		21
27. Holding to the Law . . .		17	19. The Just . . .		17
28. The Way . . .		28	20. The Way . . .		17
29. Miscellaneous . . .		14	21. Miscellaneous . . .		16
30. Hell . . .		16	22. The Backward Course . . .		14
31. The Elephant . . .		18	23. The Elephant . . .		14
32. Lust . . .		32	24. Thirst . . .		26
33. Advantageous Service . . .		20	[Absent]
34. The Shaman . . .		32	25. The Bhikshu . . .		23
35. The Brahmachârin . . .		40	26. The Brâhmana . . .		41
36. Nirvâna . . .		36
37. Birth and Death . . .		18
38. Profit of Religion . . .		19
39. Good Fortune . . .		19

We see, then, that from the ninth chapter to the thirty-fifth (with one exception, viz., the thirty-third) the two

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

沙門品

INTRODUCTION.

14

此	比	學	樂	學
丘	丘	無	法	當	常	可	端
爲	少	求	欲	守	內	以	目
慈	取	利	法	口	樂	免	耳
					定	眾	鼻
愛	以	無	思	寡	意	苦	口
敬	得	愛	惟	言
佛	無	他	安	安	守	手	身
教	積	行	法	徐	一	足	意
					行	莫	常
深	天	比	比	法	寂	妄	守
入	人	丘	丘	義	然	犯	正
止	所	好	依	爲
觀	譽	他	法	定		節	比
						言	丘
滅	生	不	正	言		慎	行
行	淨	得	而	必		所	如
乃	無	定	不	柔		行	是
安	穢	意	費	輒

如	生	不	當	當	無	禪	捨	比	一
衛	當	受	制	學	禪	無	五	丘	切
師	行	所	五	入	不	放	斷	厚	名
華	淨	有	陰	空	智	逸	五	船	色
熟	求	爲	伏	靜	無	莫	思	中	非
知	善	慧	意	居	智	爲	惟	虛	有
自	師	比	如	止	不	欲	五	則	莫
墮	友	丘	水	意	禪	亂	糧	輕	惑
釋	智	攝	清	樂	道	無	能	除	不
疑	者	糧	淨	獨	從	吞	分	疑	近
怒	成	知	和	屏	禪	鏹	別	怒	不
癡	人	足	悅	處	智	銅	五	癡	憂
生	度	戒	爲	一	得	百	乃	是	乃
死	苦	律	甘	心	至	惱	度	爲	爲
自	致	悉	露	觀	泥	焦	河	泥	比
解	喜	持	味	法	洹	形	淵	洹	丘

爲	截			儻	喜	我	當	正
之	流			有	在	自	自	身
爲	自			少	佛	爲	餘	正
之	忖			行	教	我	身	言
		比	知	棄
		丘	是	慢
		渡	勝	無
		河	於	餘
必	折	流	故	驕	應	計	內	心
強	心				佛	無	與	守
自	却	勝	割	蓮	教	有	心	玄
制	欲	欲	愛	華	誠	我	爭	默
		明	無	冰
捨	人	於	戀	生	此	故	護	比
家	不	故	慕	淨	照	當	身	丘
而	割				世	損	念	棄
懈	欲		不	學	間	我	諦	世
			受	能
意	一		如	捨	如	調	比	是
猶	意		蓮	彼	日	乃	丘	爲
復	猶		華	此	無	爲	惟	受
梁	走				瞋*	賢	安	寂

* Here ends the Text as found in the Pāli. I have, however, added the whole of the Chinese.

息	息	不	袈	沙	行
心	心	調	婆	門	懈
非	非	難	披	何	緩
剔	剔	戒	肩	行	者
放	慢	如	爲	如	勞
逸	弛	風	惡	意	意
無	無	枯	不	不	弗
信	戒	樹	損	禁	除
能	捨	自	行	步	非
滅	貪	作	惡	步	淨
衆	思	爲	者	著	梵
苦	道	身	死	黏	行
爲	乃	易	斯	但	焉
上	應	不	墮	隨	致
沙	息	精	惡	思	火
門	心	進	道	走	寶

TRANSLATION FROM THE PĀLI.

BY PROFESSOR MAX MÜLLER.

THE BHIKSHU (MENDICANT).

360.

Restraint in the eye is good, good is restraint in the ear, in the nose restraint is good, good is restraint in the tongue.

361.

In the body restraint is good, good is restraint in speech, in thought restraint is good, good is restraint in all things. A Bhikshu, restrained in all things, is freed from all pain.

362.

He who controls his hand, he who controls his feet, he who controls his speech, he who is well controlled, he who delights inwardly, who is collected, who is solitary and content, him they call Bhikshu.

363.

The Bhikshu who controls his mouth, who speaks wisely and calmly, who teaches the meaning and the Law, his word is sweet.

364.

He who dwells in the Law, delights in the Law, meditates on the Law, follows the Law, that Bhikshu will never fall away from the true Law.

365.

Let him not despise what he has received, nor ever envy others: a mendicant who envies others does not obtain peace of mind.

366.

A Bhikshu who, though he receives little, does not despise what he has received, even the gods will praise him, if his life is pure, and if he is not slothful.

367.

He who never identifies himself with his body and soul, and does not grieve over what is no more, he indeed is called a Bhikshu.

368.

The Bhikshu who acts with kindness, who is calm in the doctrine of Buddha, will reach the quiet place (Nirvâna), cessation of natural desires, and happiness.

369.

O Bhikshu, empty this boat! if emptied, it will go quickly; having cut off passion and hatred, thou wilt go to Nirvâna.

370.

Cut off the five (senses), leave the five, rise above the five? A Bhikshu, who has escaped from the five fetters, he is called Oghatinna, "Saved from the flood."

371.

Meditate, O Bhikshu, and be not heedless! Do not direct thy thought to what gives pleasure! that thou mayest not for thy heedlessness have to swallow the iron ball (in hell), and that thou mayest not cry out when burning, "This is pain."

372.

Without knowledge there is no meditation, without meditation there is no knowledge; he who has knowledge and meditation is near unto Nirvâna.

373.

A Bhikshu who has entered his empty house, and whose mind is tranquil, feels a more than human delight when he sees the law clearly.

374.

As soon as he has considered the origin and destruction of the elements (khandha) of the body, he finds happiness and joy which belong to those who know the immortal (Nirvâna).

375.

And this is the beginning here for a wise Bhikshu: watchfulness over the senses, contentedness, restraint under the Law; keep noble friends whose life is pure, and who are not slothful.

376.

Let him live in charity, let him be perfect in his duties; then in the fulness of delight he will make an end of suffering.

377.

As the Vassikâ-plant sheds its withered flowers, men should shed passion and hatred, O ye Bhikshus!

378.

The Bhikshu whose body and tongue and mind are quieted, who is collected, and has rejected the baits of the world, he is called Quiet.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

such stories “may have been invented to suit the text of the Dhammapada rather than vice versâ” (p. cvi. n.), and this appears to be very probable; but yet the stories found in the work before us must have been well known in India prior to the middle of the third century A.D., and judging from the ordinary period occupied in the transmission of such tales, we may reasonably refer them to a date perhaps as early as Dharmatrâta himself. The method adopted in this work is to give one or two tales, and a verse or more, as the Moral. The chapters are identical with the Fă-kheu-king—the only difference being that the verses or gâthas are fewer—they are, in fact, only a selection from the whole to meet the requirements of the story preceding them. This arrangement is in agreement with the original design of the work. Buddhaghosha, we are told, gives for each verse a parable to illustrate the meaning of the verse, and believed to have been uttered by Buddha in his intercourse with his disciples, or in preaching to the multitudes that came to hear him.¹ And so here we have a tale for each verse, delivered by Buddha for the benefit of his disciples, or others. As to the character of these stories, some of them are puerile and uninteresting. But if I mistake not, they are of a description not opposed to the character of the age to which they are assigned by the Chinese.

The method of teaching by parables, it is plain, was customary in India during the first and second centuries B.C. The Jâtakas, and the stories which occupy such a great part of the ordinary lives of Buddha (vid. Romantic Legend, passim), are illustrations of this. We know also from sculptures that these stories were familiar in India, and were, in fact, the ordinary means for instructing the people, at a date somewhere about the second century B.C., if not earlier,² so that I see no reason why the parables in this work, which was brought to China, in the first

¹ Max Müller, Dh. ix.

dated by General Cunningham from

² The Sculptures at Bharahut are the time of Aśoka, some 350 B.C.

instance, about 220 A.D, should not be the very ones attributed to Dharmatrâta at least 70 B.C. I am sorry that I have not been able to trace any agreement between these stories and those given by Buddhaghosha. Mr. Fausböll's notes are mostly mere transcriptions in Pâli, but yet enough may be gathered from these, even by one who is not a Pâli scholar, to make it clear that the stories to which he refers are not the same as those I have translated; the solution of this difficulty will have to be sought in the hint before alluded to, viz., that the parables were invented to suit the text of Dhammapada rather than vice versâ (Max Müller's Dh. cvi. n.). I shall leave any further observations on the Gâthâs which accompany the stories, for the notes that will be found in the book itself.

The third version of Dhammapada known in China is entitled "Chuh-yau-king," which may signify the Sûtra of "the Dawn," or "birth of Light."¹ This work is very much expanded, consisting, in fact, of seven volumes, comprising twenty kiouen or books. It is still referred to Ârya Dharmatrâta as its author; its translator was Chufo-nien (or, Fo-nien (Buddhasmriti?) the Indian (Chu) who lived during the Yaou-Tsin period, about 410 A.D. In the preface to this version we are told that Dharmatrâta was uncle of Vasumitra, and that he was the original compiler of the stanzas and stories known as Fă-kheu-King (Dhammapada). It informs us, moreover, that the old term "pi-u," i.e., Avadânas, was the same as "the Dawn," and that these Avadânas composed the sixth of the twelve sections (aṅgas) that made up the whole verses, I observe, are repeated in each alternate section, as in a "refrain." The Colophon explains that this work belongs to the class known as "In-tou-cho-tsah," i.e., "Indian Miscellanies," perhaps the Khuddakā-nikāya of the South.

¹ In the Encyclopædia known as Chi-yuen-fă-pao-kha'n-tung-tsung-liu Catalogue, Case xci.), this work is also called "Chuh-yau-lun," Kiouen 9, fol. 2⁶/₁. This book deserves attention. It would well repay translation, if the study of Chinese Buddhist books ever commands notice. The

Buddhist Canon. The author of the Chinese Preface has mistaken Avadâna (pi-u, i.e., comparison; although, as Burnouf states, it is difficult to account for this explanation of the word. Int. Bud. 64) for Nidâna; for it is the Nidânas that compose the sixth of the twelve parts of the Buddhist Canon (aṅgas), and as the word Nidânam is confessedly used to signify “the narrative of the circumstances under which any sermon of Buddha was delivered” (Childers, Pâli Dict. sub voce), it may be very well applied to the narratives or stories which explain the circumstances under which the stanzas composing Dhammapada were first delivered. The title, “The Dawn,” or “Coming forth of Light,” is a very usual and significant one to indicate the “origin” or “cause,” and in this sense is a proper rendering of Nidâna. The preface goes on to state that a Shaman Sañghbhadanga of Ki-pin (Cabul) came to Tchangan (Siganfu) about the nineteenth year of the period Kien-Yuen.¹ Having travelled back to India and returned with a copy of the present work, it was eventually translated by Foenien, with the assistance of others. Without going through this voluminous work, we may observe that the whole of the first volume, comprising seventy-four double pages, is occupied with the subject “Impermanency,” in which there are stories on stories, and verses on verses, most of which appear to be artificially made for one another; the second subject is “Desire,” which occupies twenty-one pages; the third is “Lust,” which occupies seventeen pages; the fourth section, however, seems to throw some light on the difference occurring between the tenth chapter of the Chinese earlier versions and the second of the Pâli; in the first the subject is “Carelessness,” in the second it is “Reflection;” now in the version we are considering the subject is restored to the

¹ So far as I can make out, this period Kien-Yuen only lasted two must have been about 345 A.D., years. although in the Hai-kwo-tu-chi the

Pâli form by the addition of a simple adjunct “Wou;” instead of “Fong-min” (carelessness) as in the former copies, we have here “wou-fong-min,” i.e., “absence of Carelessness,” or “Reflection,” as in the Southern copy. This may perhaps show that the original used by Fournien was not altogether uncanonical. We may add that the whole number of chapters in this work is thirty-three, and that the last is, like the Pâli, on “the Brâhmâna.” There are ample commentaries attached to many of the verses, so that, after all, this work is of considerable value, and deserving of close examination.

With respect to the last version of the Dhammapada in Chinese, I can only say that it is still assigned to Dharmatrâta as its author,¹—but there is no resemblance in it to the earlier translation. I shall not attempt, therefore, to institute any comparison between it and the Southern copy, agreement with which alone could make any notice of it in the present work interesting or useful.

I have selected the second Chinese version for translation in preference to the first, because of its completeness. If my object had been to institute a comparison between the Pâli and Chinese copies of Dhammapada, the earlier version would doubtless have been the one to select for the purpose. But such is not the aim of the present book. Its purpose is to show the method adopted by the early Buddhist teachers and preachers who were mainly instrumental in diffusing a knowledge of this religion through the Eastern world. The simple method of Parable was the one used. Doubtless it was this method which, in the first place, contributed to the wide prevalence of the system, and has since enabled it to keep its hold on the minds of so many millions of people. And when we consider the peculiar simplicity of these tales, and the truth contained in the morals drawn from them, we do not wonder at the result; nor can it be questioned that the influence of such teaching must have been beneficial to those affected by it.

¹ Vide Catalogue of the Chinese Sung dynasty (800 or 900 A.D.), and Tripiṭaka, Case LXXVII., p. 95. The translation was made so late as the is, therefore, very corrupt.

With regard to the critical uses to be made of the expressions herein contained, it will suffice to add that my own conviction expressed many years since respecting the primitive idea of Nirvâna, that it was designed to denote a state of rest and peace, resulting from the absence of sorrow and the delusions of sense, is in this work completely confirmed; nor can I see anything in Mr. D'Alwis' remarks on the subject to weaken this conviction. However, this contention is in the hands of other champions, well able from their knowledge of the matter and of the Pâli language, to conduct it to a fair issue, and with them I leave it.

My hope is that some of our younger students (especially those already grounded in Sanscrit) may be induced to take up the subject of "Buddhism in China." It is one which has abundant claims on the attention of the student of religion, but especially on the philanthropist and the missionary,¹ and it is my firm belief that comparatively little will be done either in producing an intelligible version of the Christian Scriptures in countries where Buddhism prevails (especially China and Japan), or in placing the doctrines of the Christian religion fairly and clearly before the people of those countries, until Buddhism is studied by every missionary, and its terminology understood, as it ought to be, by those who constantly use the same terms, in a sense more or less diverse and sometimes directly opposite.²

The books now in England offer a large and open field

¹ There are some excellent remarks regarding the duties of missionaries in their work amongst Buddhists, in the introduction to M. Wassilief's "Buddhism," by M. Ed. Laboulaye, pp. viii., xvi. Compare also some remarks respecting incorrect translations of religious phrases, by the late Dr. Ballantyne, "Christianity contrasted with Hindu Philosophy," Introduction, pp. viii., ix.

² The expression used by the Rofor investigation, and the delight which the study of works wholly unknown to the European world must naturally afford, ought to be a sufficient inducement to tempt those who have the leisure to engage in this pursuit, and to prosecute it with determination.

man Catholic missionaries for “God” (tien chu), is the common term in Buddhist books for “Indra,” or, as we should say, “Jupiter.” Almost every page of the New Testament version used by Protestant missionaries in China, has some expression or other which would convey to the mind of the Buddhist, either a perverted idea, or else one repugnant to his prejudices. Such expressions ought, therefore, to be explained.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

with this introductory phrase, "Thus have I heard." The place where the sermon was preached is also given, and the occasion and circumstances of it. It was from these works that the Shamans, in after years, copied out the various Gâthâs, some of four lines, some of six lines, and attached to each set a title according to the subject therein explained. But all these verses, without exception, are taken from some one or other of the accepted Scriptures, and therefore they are called Law-verses (or Scripture extracts); because they are found in the Canon.

Now the common edition used by people generally is the one with 700 Câthas. The meaning of these Gâthâs is sometimes very obscure (deep), and men say that there is no meaning at all in them. But let them consider that as it is difficult to meet with a teacher like Buddha, so the words of Buddha are naturally hard of explanation. Moreover, all the literature of this religion is written in the language of India, which widely differs from that of China—the language and the books, in fact, are those of the Devas (Heaven). So to translate them faithfully is not an easy task.

The present work, the original of which consisted of 500 verses, was brought from India in the third year of the reign of Hwang-wu (A.D. 223), by Wai-chi-lan, and, with the help of another Indian called Tsiang-im, was first explained, and then translated into Chinese. On some objection being made as to the inelegance of the phrases employed, Wai-chi-lan stated "that the words of Buddha are holy words, not merely elegant or tasteful, and that his Law is not designed to attract persons by its pleasing character, but by its deep and spiritual meaning."

Finally, the work of translation was finished, and afterwards 13 additional sections added, making up the whole to 752 verses, 14,580 words, and headings of chapters, 39.

D H A M M A P A D A,
OR VERSES FROM THE LAW, WITH ACCOMPANYING PARABLES.

A SŪTRA (Cod. 2.)

TRANSLATED BY THE SHAMANS FĀ-KHEU AND FA-LIH, OF THE WESTERN TSIN DYNASTY.

SECTION I.

IMPERMANENCY (ANICCATĀ).

1. THE first parable¹ in this section relates that Śakra having on one occasion been conceived in the household of a potter, as the offspring of the female ass that turned the mill, the ass, overjoyed at the prospect of progeny, kicked her heels up, and broke all the pitchers and pots which the master had made. On this the man, taking a stick, belaboured the beast to such a degree, that the newly-formed foetus was destroyed, and the prospect of

¹ This parable is the same in Cod. i. and ii. It differs in Cod. iii. In the last name, the scene of the story is at Vaisâlî. The sermon was designed to show the comparative worthlessness of all earthly grandeur. The argument was derived from the gaudy

equipages of the youths of Vaisâlî, who drove to the Vihâra where Buddha was (the Monkey-tank Vihâra) in their variously-adorned chariots. [But in Cod. iii. the verse occurs after the third story.]

offspring cut off. On which occasion Buddha repeated these lines—

“Whatever exists¹ (sanskāra) is without endurance. And hence the terms “flourishing” and “decaying.”² A man is born, and then he dies. Oh, the happiness of escaping from this condition! For the life of men is but as the earthen vessels made in a potter’s mill; formed with such care, they are all destined to destruction.”

Śakra, having heard these verses, was enabled to enter on the first path of the Buddhist profession, and obtained peace.

2. On a certain occasion Buddha was residing in the country of Śrāvastî (Sewet). The Râja Prasenajit had been celebrating the funeral obsequies of the queen-mother, aged more than ninety years. On his return, he came to the place where Buddha was and saluted him. On this the great teacher spake thus (after inquiring respecting the occasion of the visit): “There are four things, O Râja! which from the first till now have been the causes of constant anxiety and fear to men—the fear of old age, of disease, of death, and of grief consequent on death. Alas! the life of man is but as the perishing things we see around us; to-day they flourish, to-morrow they are gone. Just as the waters of the five rivers³ are ever flowing on without cessation day and night, such is the case with man—his life is ever ebbing away.” And then the Honoured of the world spoke these words and said—

“As the waters of a river ever hasten on and flow away, and once gone, never return, such is

¹ Ch. hing.

has often the meaning I have given it

² The Chinese fă, as is well known, in the text.

³ Of the Panjab?

the life of man. That which is gone knows not any return."

Buddha having further expounded this subject, the King and his attendants dismissed their grief, and, filled with joy, entered the "Paths."¹

3. On a certain occasion, when Buddha was dwelling in the Bamboo Garden near Rājagriha, he had been preaching in the city, and was returning homewards with his followers when he met a man driving a herd of fat and sleek cattle towards the gates of the town. On this the Honoured of the world took up the subject, and spake as follows:—

"As a man with his staff in his hand² goes along tending and pasturing the cattle, so are old age and death, they also watch over the life that perishes; and of all they watch over, there is not one, of whatever class, man or woman, rich or poor, but in the end shall decay and disappear. Every day and night takes from the little space given to each one born; there is the gradual decay of a few years and all is gone, as the waters of a pool are cut off (or exhausted)."

Buddha having arrived at the grove, and having washed his feet and arranged his robes, sat down; on this occasion Ânanda respectfully asked him to explain the verses he had just repeated, on which the Honoured of the world related that the master of the oxen he had just seen sent them forth day by day to pasture and feed, in order that when fattened and well conditioned they might be killed one by one. "Such," he added, "is the fate of all that lives ; it is thus it flourishes for a moment and then dies." On this upwards of two hundred of the hearers obtained spiritual powers,¹ and became Rahats."

¹ The "paths" are the four stages in the progress towards complete emancipation. (Compare Max Müller, Dhammapada, cix., n.)

² This verse seems to agree with No. 135 of the Pâli. (Catena, p. 27.)

4. On one occasion when Buddha was residing at Śrāvastî, in the Garden of Anâthapindada,² a certain Brahmachârin,³ who had lost an only daughter, about fourteen or fifteen years of age, very beautiful and much beloved, being nearly deprived of reason through grief, having heard tidings of the wisdom of the holy one (Buddha), came to him where he was, and laid bare the cause of his unhappiness, on which the teacher took up his discourse, and said—

"There are four things in the world, O Brahmachârin! which cannot permanently last, and what are the four? Thinking we have obtained something that will last, it must needs be we find that it will not continue. Being rich, it must needs be poverty will come. Being united and agreed, there will be division and separation. Being strong and hale, yet there will come death." And then the Honoured of the world added these lines—
"That which appears permanent will perish ; that which is high will be brought low ; where there is agreement, there will come division ; and where there is birth, there will be death."

¹ Miraculous power, or, the power to work miracles.

² As is well known this person bought for Buddha a site near Śrāvastî, on which the celebrated Jetavana Vihâra was built. There are full accounts in the Chinese Canon of his history, which agree with those found in the south. (Compare the Chinese copy of Mahāvastu, K. 6.)

³ The word "Brahmachârin" occurring throughout this work corresponds to the "Brâhmana" of the Southern version.

On this the Brahmachârin received enlightenment, and having assumed the robes and tonsure of a Bhikshu, he quickly became a Rahat.

5. Once when Buddha was residing in the Gridhrakûta Mountain, near Râjagriha, there was a certain famous courtesan in the city, called "Lien-hwa" (Pundarî, or Padma) most beautiful in form, and incomparable for grace. This woman, wearied of her mode of life, resolved to join herself to Buddha and become a Bhikshuni. Accordingly she proceeded towards the place where he was, and having half ascended the mountain, she halted awhile at a fountain of water to drink; whilst lifting the water to her mouth she saw her face reflected in the fountain, and she could not but observe her own incomparable beauty, the delicacy of her complexion, her rosy hair, her graceful figure. On seeing herself thus she altered her mind, and said—"Shall one born so beautiful as I am go out of the world and become a recluse?—no! rather let me have my fill of pleasure and be satisfied"—on this she made ready to turn back and go home. But in the meantime Buddha, seeing the circumstance, and knowing that Pundarî was in a condition to be saved (converted), transformed himself at once into a beautiful woman, infinitely more charming than Pundarî. Meeting as they went, the courtesan was amazed at the beauty of the strange woman, and asked her, "Whence come you, fair one? and where dwell your kindred? and why do you travel thus alone without attendants?" On which the stranger replied, "I am returning to yonder city, and though we be not acquainted, let us join company and go together." On this they went on their way till they came to a certain fountain on the road, where they sat down. At length, the conversation having ceased, the strange beauty, resting herself against the knees of Pundarî, fell asleep. After a time the courtesan, looking down on her friend, was amazed to behold her form entirely changed;

she had become loathsome as a corpse, her face pallid, her teeth gone, the hair fallen from her head, hateful insects feeding on her flesh. Frightened and aghast at the sight, Pundarî hastened away from the spot, and as she exclaimed "How transient is human beauty!" she hurried back again in the direction of Buddha's dwelling-place, and having arrived, cast herself prostrate at his feet, and related to him what she had seen, on which Buddha addressed her thus—"There are four things, Pundarî, which must ever cause sadness and disappointment. That one, however beautiful, must yet become old; that one, however firmly established, must die; that one bound in closest ties of relationship and affection, must yet be separated from those he loves; and that wealth, heaped up in ever such profusion, must yet be scattered and lost." And then the World-honoured added these lines, and said—

"Old age brings with it loss of all bodily attraction; through decay and disease a man perishes; his body bent, and his flesh withered, this is the end of life. What use is this body when it lies rotting beside the flowings of the Ganges? It is but the prison-house of disease, and of the pains of old age and death. To delight in pleasure, and to be greedy after self-indulgence, is but to increase the load of sin, forgetting the great change that must come, and the inconstancy of human life. With no son to depend upon, without father or brother; Death pressing at the door—without a friend (relation) to look to for aid."

The courtesan having heard these words, was able to see that life is but as the flower, that there is nought permanent but Nirvâna, and so she requested permission

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

nor in the hidden fastness of the mountain, nor in any other place can death be escaped. It is by knowing this and reflecting upon it that the Bhikshu is able to overthrow the army of Mâra and obtain deliverance from birth and death.”¹ go to Heaven. If you are able to persevere in the good path, then without any remnants (of sorrow) you will enter Nirvâna.”

¹ In Cod. iii. we have numerous verses under the heading of this chapter, among which I observe on fol. 9 and 10 the stanza, numbered 146 in the Southern copy.

“What joy? What laughter? let us recollect the everlasting burnings! Lost in deepest gloom, why seek ye not the Light?” [The “everlasting burnings” are explained in the Commentary as those resulting from sorrow and pain.] As a further instance of epigram in these verses, I would refer to Cod. iii. K. II. ¹⁵/₁. “The Sun which shines to-day once set, so much less of life remains! Ah! what joy can there be in this condition, resembling the fish in ever-shallowing waters.” [With respect to “burning,” as the result of sin—consult v. 136, n. Max Müller, Dh.]

SECTION II.

INCITING TO WISDOM.¹

1. THIS section consisting of twenty-nine verses,² is designed to excite listless mendicants to renewed exertion in the path of Duty. The first four gâthas were spoken by Buddha in the Jetavana at Śrāvastî. On this occasion a careless disciple had left the company of his hearers, whilst he was preaching on the necessity of exertion in casting off the hindrances and trammels that prevent advance in a religious life. Having retired to the interior of his cell, he indulged himself in sleep and effeminacy—not knowing that after seven days he would die. Whereupon Buddha addressed him thus:

“Alas ! arise thou !³ why sleeping there ? a companion of the spider, and the creeping insect. Hidden from sight, practising impurity, miserably deceived with regard to the character of the body (or Life), even as one who dreads the amputation of a diseased limb, his heart heavy, and his affliction great, seeks forgetfulness in sleep, but nevertheless cannot escape the recollection of his coming calamity—such is your case. But the man who strives after true wisdom,⁴ feels no such sorrow, always reflecting on religion, he forgets himself—

¹ Chinese “kian hioh.” We observe that in Cod. iii. the title of this second chapter is “Desire” or “Lust” (Tanhá), and its verses agree with 212, ss. of the Pâli.

² That is in Cod. ii.

³ There is some similarity here with § 168 and the Southern copy.

⁴ Literally “understands the character (outline) of virtue.”

possessed of right apprehension of Truth he increases in wisdom daily, he becomes a light in the world ; however born,¹ his happiness is a thousand fold greater, and in the end he shall escape every evil mode of existence."

Hearing these verses the mendicant arose and came before Buddha, and prostrated himself in his presence ; on which the World-honoured asked him if he knew his former states of existence ; the mendicant confessed that owing to the indulgence of his carnal desires, he was unable to penetrate such mysteries—on which the teacher explained how in the time of a former Buddha he had been a disciple, but had given way to self-indulgence and sleep—on account of which he had been born for many thousand years, as an insect, and in other similar forms—but now his evil Karma exhausted, he had again been born as a man and become a mendicant. On hearing this the Shaman, struck with remorse, repented of his sin and became a Rahat.

2. Formerly, when Buddha was residing at Śrāvastî, in the Jetavana, whilst preaching for the benefit of the four orders of his followers, there was a young Bhikshu, who being overcome by foolish thoughts, was unable to restrain his desires. Grieved at this, he resolved to dismember himself, and for that purpose he went to the house of his Patron (dânapati), and having procured a knife he proceeded to his cell, and sitting on his couch he began to reflect on the evil which resulted from the power of gratifying desire. Buddha knowing his thoughts, and perceiving him to be deceived by ignorance of the true cause of his conduct, an ill-restrained mind, proceeded to his cell, and inquired what he was going to do. On this the Bhikshu explained that as he was unable to check desire, and in consequence to advance in religious exercise, he was about to dismember himself. On this Buddha explained that uncertainty and doubt were the causes of delay in religious progress, that the first thing to do was to govern the mind, and restrain the thoughts, without which merely to get rid of the external instrument of evil was useless, and then he added these lines—

¹ Or, "whatever is born, its happiness is a thousandfold greater," i.e., in consequence of his virtue.

“Learning first to cut off the Mother, and to follow the one true guide (Minister), dismissing all the subordinate place-holders, this is (the conduct of) the truly enlightened man.”

And then explaining that “Doubt” was the Mother, and the twelve causes and effects”¹ the subordinates, whilst Wisdom was the one Minister, the Bhikshu obtained enlightenment, and was at rest.

3. Formerly, when Buddha was residing in the Gridhrakûta Mountain near Râjagriha preaching the Law of Eternal Life (i.e., Nirvâna) to the assembled multitudes, there was a certain obdurate and hardened Bhikshu present, on whom the words of the Preacher had no effect. On this Buddha, knowing his thoughts, sent him to the back of the mountains to meditate beneath a tree in the middle of the gorge, known as that of the “Evil Spirits”—with a view to his casting away the impediments that prevented him from attaining Nirvâna. Arrived at the spot he was constantly alarmed and interrupted by the sounds of the evil spirits, though he saw no form, and so instead of arriving at a fixed state of composure, he rather desired to go back to the place whence he came—but on reflecting that the sounds he heard were only those of evil spirits who wished to drive him from his purpose, he stayed where he was. Then Buddha coming near him as he sat, took his place beside him and said—“Have you no fear dwelling alone in this solitary place?” to which he replied—“At first when I had scarcely yet entered on this part of the Mountain, I was for a moment filled with fear—but then a wild elephant coming to the place where I was, and lying down close to me under a Tree, went to sleep, as though he were perfectly rejoiced to get away from the rest of the herd, and be at peace (and so I was re-assured).” Then Buddha, knowing perfectly the circumstances of the case, said, “That elephant was but one of a herd of five hundred, who from fear that he might be captured with the rest, found his joy in separation, and a solitary life—how much more, then, should you seek for happiness in leaving your home, and practising in solitude the rules of an ascetic life?” and then he added these verses—

¹ The Nidânas

“Perceiving that the ignorant herd can never attain true Wisdom,¹ the wise man prefers in solitude to guard himself in virtuous conduct, not associating with the foolish; rejoicing in the practice of moral duties (sīla), and pursuing such conduct as becomes this mode of life, there is no need of a companion or associate in such practice—solitary in virtue, without sorrow, a man rejoices as the wild elephant (escaped from the herd).”

On hearing these words the Bhikshu obtained rest, and the “Evil Spirits” also, who listened and understood them, were so awed that they vowed never again to molest solitary ascetics, and then Buddha and the mendicant returned to their place.

4. On a certain occasion when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana at Śrāvastī, preaching for the good of Devas and men, two new disciples from Rājagriha desired to go to the place where he was to see him. Between the two countries there was an uninhabited and inhospitable desert. Parched with the heat and utterly exhausted, they came at length to a pool of water and sat down, eagerly desiring to slake their thirst. But they perceived that the water was full of insects, and so hesitated to drink. At length one said, "If I drink not I shall not be able to see Buddha, the end justifies the means," and so he drank of the water. The other, considering that the Law of Buddha was one of universal love, which forbade the taking of life, refused to drink, and as the other went on his way alone, the latter died and was born in Heaven. Then considering the circumstances of his former life, he quickly descended and came to the place where Buddha was and saluted him. In a short time the first also arrived at the place, and on Buddha asking him whence he came and where his companion was, he related with tears all the circumstances of the case, on which the Teacher, pointing to the bright Deva come down from Heaven, assured the other that this was his former companion; he had kept the Law and was born in Heaven, and was the first to behold the form of Buddha; but you "who say you see me, and yet have transgressed my Law, are not seen by me, but are as though you were distant ten thousand li, whereas this man who has kept the Law, dwells ever in my sight," and the World-honoured one added these lines, and said—

¹ The expression “Shen yau” is used in a Buddhist sense for “Bôdhi.”

"The obedient disciple who follows the precepts without fail, in either world (Heaven or earth) exalted, he shall obtain his desire and aim (his prayer). But, on the other hand, the disciple who is stint in obedience, not keeping the precepts in their strictness, in either world grievously afflicted, mourns for his former vows (unaccomplished). Yet both,¹ if they persevere in their inquiries and search, shall be saved from error, although with difficulty."

On hearing these words the disciple who had erred was overjoyed, and arrived at enlightenment.

¹ It is possible the expression may refer to the second only.

SECTION III.

THE DISCIPLE, OR “ŚRÂVAKA.”

1. ONCE on a time in Śrâvastî there was a certain housewife, poor though she was, who had no religious principle, and was without faith. Buddha seeing her condition was moved with pity. He saw that, whenever his followers went begging through the city, they met with nothing but abuse at the door of this woman's house. On a Shaman exhorting her, on the ground that he only sought alms as a religious duty, she said, “If you were dying I would give you nothing, much less now that you are hale and well.” On this the Shaman, standing before her, assumed the condition of one who was really dead. The various functions of his body ceased, and from his mouth and nose crept in and out the hateful insects that accompany death. On seeing this ghastly sight, the woman fell down in a swoon, and so remained. Meanwhile the Shaman, by his spiritual power, transported himself thence a few lis, and, sitting beneath a tree, composed himself to contemplation. Meantime the husband of the woman returning, and finding his wife in the condition related, inquired the reason of it, on which she replied that she had been frightened by a rascally Shaman. On this the husband in a rage seized his bow and his sword, and set out to pursue and avenge himself on the mendicant. Coming to where he was, the Shaman, by his spiritual power, surrounded himself with a wall, through which there were gates of approach, but all were closed. The incensed husband, being unable to get at the mendicant, asked him to open the gates; on which he replied, “Lay aside your bow and your sword and you

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

countless thousands, like themselves, throughout the world, were converted and saved.

2. In old time, when Buddha was residing in the country of Kausâmbî, in a certain Vihâra called Mei-yin (beautiful voice), and preaching for the sake of the four orders, there was a certain Brahmachârin, unrivalled for knowledge of Scripture, who being unable to find any one equal to himself in argument, was accustomed to carry, wherever he went, a lighted Torch in his hand. One day a man in the market-place of a certain town, seeing him thus, asked him the reason of his strange conduct, on which he replied —“The world is so dark, and men so deluded, that I carry this Torch to light it up so far as I can.”¹ At this time Buddha transformed himself into a man of eminence (magistrate), who, sitting on his chair of office in the market-place, forthwith called out to the Brahmachârin, “What ho there! what are you about (with that Torch)?” To whom the Brahmachârin replied, “All men are so wrapped in ignorance and gloom, that I carry this Torch to illumine them.” Then the magistrate asked him again, “And are you so learned as to be acquainted with the four treatises (vidyâs) which occur in the midst of the Sacred Books, to wit, the treatise on Literature (Śabdavidyâ); the treatise on the “Heavenly Bodies and their Paths;” the treatise on “Government;” and the treatise on “Military Art”? On the Brahmachârin being forced to confess he was unacquainted with these things, he flung away his Torch, and Buddha appearing in his glorious body, added these words—

“If any man, whether he be learned or not, consider himself so great as to despise other men, he is like a blind man holding a candle—blind himself, he illumines others.”

On hearing these words the Brahmachârin sought to become a disciple of Buddha, and was accordingly admitted.

¹ This recalls the story of Diogenes and his lantern.

3. There was in former days a certain nobleman, called Su-ta (Sudatta?), residing at Śrāvastî, who had become a disciple of Buddha, and entered on the first path. He had a friend called "Hau-shi" (Sudana?), who was not a believer. On this latter falling sick, and finding no help in any one for whose advice he sent, his friend Sudatta resolved to send for Buddha, and ask him to visit his friend. In compliance with the request Buddha came, and, with his body glorious as the sun, entered the house of Sudana, and sat down. [He then preached a sermon on the moral diseases to which men are liable, and afterwards added these lines]:

"The office of the Sun is to give light; the office of a Father, to be kind and compassionate; the office of a Ruler is to restrain and govern; the office of a Man of Reason (religious man) is to listen to instruction; a physician concerns himself with prolonging the life of men; a warrior desires victory; and so Religion (the Law) resides in the possession of wisdom. A happy walk through life is the gladness of the world; a friend is for consultation; the choice of a companion is for the occasion which requires him; to behold the beauty of women is the joy of the chamber; the proof of wisdom is in speaking; to be a Ruler one must be able to discriminate rightly; to dispel doubt and error, one must exercise the light of supreme wisdom (Bôdhi); to search out the foundation of rest and quiet, one must be able faithfully to hold (observe) the Treasures of the Law (the Scriptures). He who hears is able to be of advantage to the present world, his wife, children, and friends, and in the next world to arrive at perfect happiness. Still hearing, he arrives at the perfection of sacred knowledge, and is able to discriminate and explain the secrets of Truth ; and thus he governs himself without transgression ; receiving the Law, he extols that which is right, and so obtains release from all (moral) disease, he dissipates all the causes of sorrow and pain, he excludes all possibility of misfortune or calamity, he is always successful in finding a ground for peace and comfort : such are the consequences following in the life of one who ‘hears much’ (the Śrâvaka).”

On hearing this sermon, the sick man was convinced of the Truth and became a disciple.

4. In times gone by, there was to the south of Râjagriha a great mountain, distant from the city about 200 li. Through this mountain there was a pass deep and lonely, through which the road to South India lay. Five hundred robbers had taken up their abode in this defile, who used to murder and spoil all travellers that passed that way. The king had vainly sent to capture them, but they always escaped. Buddha, residing in the neighbourhood, and considering the case of these men, that they understood not the nature of their conduct, and that although he had come into the world to teach men, yet their eyes had not seen him, nor their ears heard the tidings of his Law, he resolved to go to them. Consequently he transformed himself into a man richly dight, on a well-caparisoned steed, with his sword and bow, with bags of silver and gold on his saddle-bow, and precious stones studding his horse’s bravery.

On entering the defile loud neighed his steed. On hearing the sound the 500 robbers started up, and spying the traveller, exclaimed, “Never have we had such prospect of booty ; let us up, and capture him !” So they proceeded to surround the traveller, with a view to prevent his escape ; but he, with one shot of his bow, pierced the 500, and with one stroke of his sword wounded them.

On their falling to the ground, they exclaimed, “What God is this? Oh that he would draw out these arrows, and assuage the bitter pain of such wounds as ours!” On this the traveller began to explain that such hurts as these were trivial compared with the pain caused by the sorrow that rules the world, and the wounds of unbelief and doubt, and that nought but the wisdom resulting from earnest attention (hearing) to the Scriptures could heal such wounds; and then he added these words and said:

“There is no painful wound so bad as sorrow—no piercing arrow so sharp as folly. Nothing can remedy these but an earnest attention to religious instruction. From this the blind receive sight, the deluded are enlightened. Men are guided and led by this, as eyes given to him without eyes. This, then, is able to dispel unbelief, to remove sorrow, to impart joy; the highest wisdom is the lot of those who ‘hear.’ This is the title of him who has acquired the greatest merit (most to be revered).”

On hearing this the robbers repented of their evil lives, and the arrows, of themselves, left their bodies, and their wounds were healed. They then became disciples, and obtained rest and peace.

SECTION IV.

SIMPLE FAITH.

1. IN the days of old, to the south-east of Śrāvastî, there was a great River, very deep and wide, on the banks of which there was a hamlet, consisting of some 500 houses, the inhabitants of which had not yet heard the news of Salvation, and were consequently immersed entirely in worldliness and selfish pursuits.

The Honoured of the world, ever thinking on the salvation of men, resolved to go to this village and preach to the people. Accordingly, he came to the river-side, and sat down beneath a tree. The village people, seeing the glory of his appearance, approached with reverence to worship him. After they had so done, Buddha began to preach to them, but they believed him not. On this Buddha caused the appearance of a man coming from the south side of the river, where the water was very deep and the current strong, walking on the surface of it; and so coming, he approached Buddha, and, bowing down, worshipped him.

All the people, seeing this appearance, asked the man in astonishment, whence he had come, "for we never in all our lives have seen such a sight as this, a man walking on the surface of the water. Tell us, then, by what artifice has this been done, and how it was you were not engulfed in the stream." On which the man replied: "I reside on the southern bank of the river, and had ever lived in ignorance and folly till I heard that Buddha was here teaching the way of deliverance, on which, coming to the bank of the river, and not having time to wait to be carried over, I asked the men if it was deep, and whether I could not cross over without a boat. On which they said, ‘Oh yes! you can cross without fear.’ On this I walked over, because I believed. Simply this and nothing more enabled me to do so.” On this Buddha said: “It is well spoken—well spoken. Faith like yours alone can save the world from the yawning gulf of continual birth and death; such faith alone can enable them to walk across dryshod (to the other shore),” and then he added these lines:

“Faith can cross the flood, even as the master of the ship (steers his bark across the sea); ever advancing in the conquest of sorrow, wisdom lands us on yonder shore. The wise man who lives by faith, in virtue of his holy life, enjoys unselfish¹ bliss, and casts off all shackles. Faith lays hold of true wisdom (or finds the path); Religion leads to deliverance from death; from hearing comes knowledge, which brings with it enlightenment; faith, with obedience (moral conduct), is the path of wisdom: firmly persevering in this, a man finds escape from pain, and is thus able to pass over and escape the gulf of destruction.”

Hearing these words, these villagers were filled with joy, and embracing the five rules, were enabled to believe on Buddha.

2. When Buddha was living in the world there was a certain nobleman called Su-lo-to (Śraddha?), of great wealth, who from a principle of faith had resolved to entertain Buddha and his disciples on the eighth day of every month in Lent (i.e., the months of rain); but on these occasions none of his sons or grandsons ever made their appearance, being engrossed in other matters. At length the nobleman died, and as none of the children cared about entertaining Buddha, a servant boy called Pi-lo-to (Vraddah?) resolved to do so. Consequently, having borrowed 500 pieces of money, he proceeded to invite the Master and his 1200 disciples to his house. After the entertainment and the departure of the guests, he went to rest; when lo! on waking the next morning, he found his house full of silver and gold and all precious substances.

¹ Wou-wei.

On going to Buddha, the Master explained that this was the result of his faith, and then added these lines:

“Faith is wealth! Obedience is wealth! Modesty also is wealth! Hearing is wealth, and so is Charity! Wisdom is sevenfold riches. Walking by Faith,¹ ever pure, a man perceives the Truth (the Law). Wisdom is as sandals on the feet to him who walks. To receive with respect instruction, and not forget it, this, whoever he be, and however born, is wealth: no question is asked whether he be male or female, it is this alone that will bring gain at the last. Whosoever is wise will understand these truths.”

Having heard these words, Pi-lo-to was enabled to believe, and became a disciple; and so his wife also, and his children.

¹ Literally “From a motive of Faith guarding (or keeping) the Precepts.”

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

keeping his thoughts in close subjection,¹ inwardly enlightened by wisdom and meditation, never forsaking the right path (path of Bôdhi): thus inwardly illumined, observing the rules of right conduct, satisfied as to the character of true wisdom, proceeding onward in the path of daily duty, this man, at rest in himself, shall get rid of all sorrow.”

The stranger having thus spoken, lo! the glorious body of Buddha shone forth, and the five men were converted, and obtained the condition of Rahats.

¹ Chi-kwan.

SECTION VI.

ON REFLECTION.

1. IN olden time, when Buddha was in the world, a certain Râja called Fo-kia-sha¹ was a friend of Bimbisâra Râja; the first, however, was not a believer in Buddha, as Bimbisâra was. On a certain occasion Vaksha had sent seven precious umbrellas (chattas) to his friend Bimbisâra. On receiving them, the latter offered them to Buddha, and said, "My friend, Vaksha Râja, has presented me with these precious umbrellas! Pray permit me to offer them to you, with the intention that his heart may be convinced and his eyes opened to behold Buddha, and he be thus led to receive your doctrine, and reverence the Holy Assembly as his reward." Then Buddha replied: "Bimbasâra Râja, cause to be written the Sûtra of the twelve Nidânas, and present the book to that king in return for the seven precious umbrellas; and his heart will be enlightened (or, receive deliverance wrought by Faith)." [Accordingly Bimbisâra did so, and his friend, in consequence, was convinced and became a disciple; and finally gave up the kingdom to his son. Having failed to obtain an interview with Buddha, although he had frequently met him in begging through the streets of Râjagriha, the Teacher at length caused the appearance of a Shaman to meet the king, and explain to him that by reflection on the work in his possession he might truly behold Buddha; and to this he added these words]:—

"The man who takes refuge in Buddha, this is the man who obtains real advantage. Night and day, therefore, he ought ever to reflect on Buddha, the Law and the Church. Being thus truly enlightened, this man is a disciple of Buddha. Thus reflecting continually on the three Treasures, and on impermanency, and his own body,¹ reflecting on moral duty, on charity, on the emptiness of all things around him, and their unreality (without marks), these are subjects for consideration.”

¹ (Vaksha?).

[On hearing these words Vaksha entered on the third path, and obtained rest.]

¹ Or, on himself.

SECTION VII.

ON LOVE OR MERCIFULNESS [Mettá].

1. IN old times, Buddha was residing in a country about 500 li from Râjagriha, full of mountains. In these mountains there lived a certain clan of about 122 persons, who occupied themselves in hunting, and fed themselves on the flesh of the animals they killed. [Buddha goes to the place and converts the women, who were left alone during the day, whilst their husbands were hunting, and then adds these lines]:

“He who is humane does not kill (or, it is humane not to kill); he is ever able to preserve (his own?) life. This principle (chu) is imperishable; whoever observes it, no calamity shall betide that man. Politeness, indifference to worldly things, hurting no one, without place for annoyance—this is the character of the Brahma Heaven (or of Brahma Deva). Ever exercising love towards the infirm; pure, according to the teaching of Buddha; knowing when sufficient has been had; knowing when to stop,—this is to escape (the recurrence of) Birth and Death.”¹

[The women, having heard these words, were converted, and on the men's return, although they wished at first to kill Buddha, they were restrained by their wives; and, listening to his words of love, they also were converted]. And then he added these lines:

¹ These Gâthâs are very obscure.

“There are eleven advantages which attend the man who practises mercifulness, and is tender to all that lives; his body is always in health (happy); he is blessed with peaceful sleep, and when engaged in study he is also composed; he has no evil dreams, he is protected by Heaven (Devas), and loved by men; he is unmolested by poisonous things, and escapes the violence of war; he is unharmed by fire or water; he is successful wherever he lives, and when dead goes to the heaven of Brahma. These are the eleven.”

Having uttered these words, both men and women were admitted into the company of his disciples, and obtained rest.

2. There was, in times gone by, a certain mighty king, called Ho-meh (love-darkness), who ruled in a certain district where no tidings of Buddha or his merciful doctrine had yet been heard; but the religious practices were the usual ones of sacrifice and prayer to the gods for protection. Now it happened that the king's mother being sick, the physicians having vainly tried their medicines, all the wise men were called to consult as to the best means of restoring her to health. After several years, during which she did not improve, the Queen mother sent for 200 celebrated Brahmans, and desired them to exercise their supernatural arts in discovering from the sun, moon, and stars a way of recovery. These Brahmans replied: “It is useless so to do, as the heavenly signs are in opposition and not favourable.” On the King asking them what should be done, they replied, “Outside the city there should be selected a convenient place, level and plane, and without pollution, and sacrifices of a hundred beasts of different kinds should be offered on the four hills (or to the four quarters), the sun, moon, and stars, with a young child as a crowning oblation to Heaven. Then the King in his own person, with his mother, going to this place to participate in the sacrifice, the stars and heavenly bodies may be propitiated.¹ [On this Buddha, moved with compassion, came to the spot, and preached a sermon on “Love to all that lives,” and added these words]:

“If a man lives a hundred years, and engages the whole of his time and attention in religious offerings to the gods, sacrificing elephants and horses, and other things, all this is not equal to one act of pure love in saving life.”

[In consequence of this sermon and the exhibition of the glorious body of Buddha, they were converted, and became disciples.]

¹ Here follows a description of the King ordering a hundred head of elephants, horses, oxen, sheep, to be driven along the road from the Eastern Gate towards the place of sacrifice, and how their piteous cries rang through (shook) heaven and earth.

SECTION VIII.

ON WORDS (CONVERSATION).

1. IN former days, when Fo-kia-sha¹ (Vaksha?) râja was entering the city of Râjagriha to beg his food from door to door, in the city gate there was a cow, just delivered of its calf, which had turned round and gored its master to death. The cow having been sold to a passer-by, he put a rope round its horns, and desired to lead it onwards; but the cow, making an attack in the rear, killed this man also; then the son, in a rage, killed the animal, and cutting it up, exposed it for sale in the market-place. Now a certain person passing by, bought the head of the creature, and carrying it away with him, as he sat down to rest, fastened it on the bough of the tree 'neath which he reposed; all at once, the rope giving way, the head fell down, and the horn, piercing the skull of the man underneath, killed him also. Bimbisâra Râja, hearing of this strange occurrence, how that a cow killed three men in one day, came to Buddha to inquire of him the antecedent causes of this event, on which Buddha related the following history:—
 “In former days there were three merchants who, coming to a certain city to transact business, took up their abode in the house of a friendless old woman, and there lodged. Being dissatisfied with their quarters, the three men left the house without payment, and on the old woman searching for them and finding them, they abused her roundly, on which she uttered this vow: ‘May I be born in after years in such a condition as to kill you all three.’

¹ This may possibly refer to a “low-born king” (Pukkaśa) vide supra, p. 49.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

SECTION IX.

TWIN VERSES.¹

I. FORMERLY when Buddha was residing at Śrāvastî, the king of the country, whose name was Prasenajit, came to the place where Buddha was, and descending from his chariot, approached the Teacher with the deepest reverence, and invited him on the morrow to enter the city and partake of his hospitality, with a view to exhibit to the people the excellency of his person and doctrine, that they might believe on him.²

Buddha having consented, on the morrow entered the city with all his disciples, and having passed through the four cross streets of the town, he came to the place appointed and sat down. After finishing the meal, he began, on the request of the king, to preach in the midst of the four highways,³ whilst his auditors were very many. At this time there were two merchants listening to him. One of them reflected, "What excellent wisdom on the part of the king to have such doctrines as these publicly preached! how wide their application, how searching their character!"

The other reflected thus, "What folly is this on the part of the king, bringing this man here to preach! Like the calf that follows the cow, here and there, fastened to a vehicle she draws, bleating as it goes—so is this Buddha following the king." The two merchants having departed from the city some thirty li, came to an inn where they put up. In taking some wine the good merchant was restrained and protected by the four guardian spirits that watch over the world. The other, on the contrary, was incited by an evil spirit to drink on, till he was overpowered by sleep, and lay down in the road near the inn. Early in the morning, the merchants' waggons leaving the place, the drivers not perceiving the man lying in the road, he was crushed to death by the waggon wheels.

¹ Here we come into agreement with the division of chapters in the Pâli. This chapter is called "Yamakavaggo," i.e., "double verses." It agrees in title with K. xviii. Cod. iii.

² A similar story is told in the Chu'h Yau, Cod. iii. book 19, fol. 6.

³ This preaching and begging in the "four highways" is constantly referred to in Buddhist works.

[The other merchant, having come to a distant country, was selected by the genuflection of a sacred horse¹ to succeed the king; and he accordingly was appointed to the throne. After this, considering the strange turn events had taken, he returned and invited Buddha to visit him, and preach to his people—on which occasion the World-honoured one declared the reason of the death of the evil-minded merchant, and the prosperity of him who thought wisely, and then added these lines]:

"The mind is the origin of all that is ;² the mind is the master, the mind is the cause.³ If in the midst of the mind⁴ there are evil thoughts, then the words are evil, the deeds are evil, and the sorrow which results from sin follows that man, as the chariot wheel follows him (or it) who draws it.

¹ This reference to a "sacred horse" is curious. It seems to show some connection of Buddhism with Sun-worship.

² In the Chu'h Yau (Cod. iii.) this verse occurs under the heading of "Thought," K. xix. fol. $\frac{6}{1}$.

³ This translation differs from the Pâli. All the Chinese versions, however, are agreed, and no other rendering seems to be admissible—"The mind is supreme, the mind is the cause." The latter term "shi"

seems to agree with the Pâli "manomayo," "springing from the mind" (Ch. sub. voc.), whilst the Chinese "tsun" corresponds with "seṭṭho" (best, excellent, &c.)

⁴ The Chinese "chung sin," although irregular, seems to be a close version of the Pâli "manasâ." The question arises whether in these translations the construction is not adapted to the original, in opposition to strict rules.

The mind is the origin of all that is ; it is the mind that commands, it is the mind that contrives. If in the mind there are good thoughts, then the words are good and the deeds good, and the happiness which results from such conduct follows that man, as the shadow accompanies the substance."

On hearing these words, the king and his ministers, with countless others, were converted, and became disciples.

2. In days of old, at the back of the Gridhrakûta mountains, near Râjagriha, there was a village, of some seventy or so families, all of them Brahmans. Buddha wishing to convert these people, came to the place and sat down under a tree. The people seeing the dignity of his presence, and the glorious appearance of his body, flocked round him, on which he asked the Brahmans how long they had dwelt in the mountain there, and what their occupation was. To this they replied—"We have dwelt here during thirty generations past, and our occupation is to tend cattle." On asking further as to their religious belief, they said—"We pay homage and sacrifice to the sun and moon, the rain (water), and fire, according to the several seasons. If one of us dies, we assemble and pray that he may be born in the heaven of Brahma, and so escape further transmigrations." Buddha replied to this—"This is not a safe way, nor by it can you escape from the three evil ways of further existence. The true way is to follow me, become true ascetics, and practise complete self-composure with a view to obtain Nivâna;" and then he added these lines:

"They who consider truth as that which is untrue,¹ and regard that which is untrue as truth, this is but to adopt heretical opinions,¹ and can never lead to true advantage. But to know as truth that which is true, and to regard as false that which is false, this is perfect rectitude, and this shall bring true profit. Everywhere in the world there is death—there is no rest in either of the three worlds. The Devas, indeed, enjoy a period of bliss ; but their happiness also must end, and they must also die ! To consider this as the condition of all states of being (worlds), that there is nothing born but must die, and, therefore, to desire to escape birth and death, this is to exercise one's self in Religious Truth."

¹ This corresponds with v. 11 of the Pâli. The Chinese "chin" is always used for "Truth," and, therefore, the Pâli "sâro" is in agreement (but it may also correspond with "essentia." F.)

The seventy Brahmans hearing these words, desired at once to become Shamans ; and on being welcomed by Buddha, their hair fell off, and they presented the appearance of true disciples. Then they all set out to return to the Vihâra, and on the road certain thoughts about their wives and families troubled them, whilst at the same time a heavy downpour of rain prevented their advance. Then Buddha, knowing their thoughts, caused some ten houses to appear by the road-side, in which they sought shelter ; but on entering one of them it was soon perceived that through the roof the rain found its way, and there was but little protection from the wet, on which Buddha added these lines, and said :

"As when a house-roof is not properly secured,² then the rain finds a way through it and drops within, so when the thoughts are not carefully controlled, the desires (sexual desires) will soon bore through all our good resolutions. But as when a roof is well stopped then the water cannot leak through, so by controlling one's thoughts, and acting with reflection, no such desires can arise or disturb us."

¹ Or "this is but an erroneous view of the case" (falsi studii participes, F.)

² In the Pâli, v. 13, ss. The agreement is very close.

The seventy Brahmans, on hearing these lines, although convinced that their desires were reprehensible, yet were not wholly free from doubt, nevertheless they went forward.

As they advanced they saw some scented paper on the ground, and Buddha took the opportunity of calling their attention to it; and after this, seeing some fish-gut also lying about, he directed their notice to its ill-odour, and then added these lines, and said:¹

"He who consorts with the low and the base, contracts the same character as he who handles a foul substance; he goes from worse to worse, and utterly without reason, he perfects himself in wickedness. But the wise man (consorting with the wise) contracts the same character, even as the scent of a sweet odour adheres to him who handles it; advancing in wisdom, practising virtue, he goes on to perfection, and is satisfied."

The seventy Brahmans, hearing these verses, convinced that their desire to return home and enjoy personal indulgence was the evil taint that adhered to them, cast off such thoughts, and, going forward, came to the Vihâra, and finally obtained the condition of Rahats.

3. In former days, when the nobleman Sudatta had bought of the heir-apparent, Jeta, the ground for a Vihâra, at Śrâvastî, then the said nobleman had invited Buddha and his followers to partake of his hospitality for a month, in consequence of which, and the sermons which the World-honoured then preached, all those present obtained enlightenment, and the Prince himself returned with joy to the Eastern Palace.¹

¹ This agrees with the story of Nanda ("Romantic Legend," p. 376).

Now Virudhaka, the prince's brother, was always near the person of the king; and on this occasion his majesty, with his suite, and the officers of the "after palace," proceeded to robe themselves, with the intention of visiting Buddha. Having arrived at the place where he was, they paid him the customary reverence, and with undivided attention listened to his instruction.

Meantime Virudhaka, remaining behind, was invited by the courtiers, in the absence of his father, to occupy his throne; and once seated there, he was unwilling to retire from it. [The consequence was, he sent and caused his father, and 500 of his followers, to be put to death. On which Buddha recited these lines]:

"The man who causes joy now, shall rejoice hereafter. Living virtuously, he doubly rejoices—he rejoices and is glad; seeing his own happiness, his heart is at rest. He rejoices now, he rejoices hereafter; doing right, he has a double joy; he enjoys Divine protection (here), and he receives his reward and is at rest (hereafter)."²

And then Buddha having foretold that Virudhaka, after seven days, should go down to hell, added these words:

"He who causes sorrow suffers sorrow hereafter. Walking in sin he doubly suffers—reflecting on the evil he has done, he suffers; seeing his guilt, he suffers more in prospect of the future. The man who repents (mourns) now, repents hereafter. On account of his evil deeds he mourns in both worlds ; seeing his own evil works, he endures the grief consequent on guilt (in this world), and he inherits the misery of his evil deeds (in the next).”

¹ The Eastern Palace is alluded to by Fa-hien, and also in General Cunningham's Arch. Survey of India (passim).

² These verses correspond with 16, ss., in the Pāli.

Buddha having addressed the people and the Prince Jeta at further length, on the folly of covetousness and an evil ambition, and Virudhaka having, as the prediction went, fallen into the condition of a lost man, the whole assembly was convinced, and were brought to a knowledge of the truth.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

fully attends to little matters, arrives at great results; he who accumulates evil actions must enter the fiery pit. But guarding the precepts, then one's happiness increases, and the gladness consequent upon it, as the contrary neglect of them leads to remorse and bitterness of heart. The Bhikshu who is able to get rid of all remnants of worldly attachment (the three worlds), this one is verily near to Nirvâna."

Then the Bhikshunî re-appearing in the glorious form of Buddha, the Shaman, filled with astonishment and fear, fell down at his feet, and repenting of his carelessness and ignorance, vowed to amend his life and follow his duty with anxious care. On this the World-honoured one forthwith recited these gâthâs:

"Although a man may have heretofore been careless, yet if afterwards he is able to govern and restrain himself, this man becomes illustrious in (or illumines) the world, and the more he reflects the more resolved will he become (to use self-restraint). A man may have done many things wrong, but if he recovers himself and atones for the evil by doing good, this man becomes illustrious in the world, and the more he reflects the more virtuous he will become. The man who in the prime of life leaves his home and perfectly tutors himself in the doctrine of Buddha, this man shines out in the world as the moon when it bursts from a cloud. The man who in times past has done wickedly, but afterwards halts in his career and offends no more—that man shines out in the world as the moon when it emerges from the cloud."

On hearing these lines, the Shaman again prostrated himself at the feet of Buddha, and returning to his solitary seat underneath a tree, applied himself sedulously to practise self-government and contemplation, and thus recovered the ground he had lost, and attained the fruit of Rahatship.

SECTION XI.

THOUGHT (CITTAVAGGO).

1. IN times of old, when Buddha dwelt in the world, there was a certain religious person who had taken his abode under a tree beside the bank of a river. After practising himself in religious exercises for twelve years, he was still unable to get rid of worldly thoughts, or to banish recollections of worldly pleasures—to wit, those resulting from sight, or hearing, or smelling, or tasting, or handling, or thoughts about the properties of things around him (dharma)—and thus after these twelve years he was still unconverted. Buddha, perceiving his capability of conversion, transformed himself into a Shaman, and came to the tree where he sat, and occupied a place near the other. After a while, in an interval of moonshining, lo! they saw a tortoise come up out of the river, and come towards the tree; at the same time a hungry river-dog¹ coming along endeavoured to lay hold of the tortoise to eat him. But no sooner did he make the attempt than the tortoise, gathering up his head and tail and legs into his shell, was in perfect safety, and the dog could do him no harm. But no sooner had the dog gone on than the tortoise, emerging from his concealment, walked on again as before. On this the ascetic observed to the Shaman—“This tortoise, because it possesses such a safe protection (lit. ‘a casque of salvation’), the dog was disappointed of his meal.” To which the Shaman replied—“I remember a man who was very different from this. This man, forgetting the im-

¹ Otter?

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

SECTION XII.

FLOWERS (PUPPHAVAGGO).

1. IN days of old, when Buddha was residing at Śrāvastî, there was to the south-east of that country, in the mid-ocean, a certain islet (a mound, or fort, or look-out), on the top of which was a tree that bore beautiful scented flowers.

In the same spot dwelt five hundred women of the Brahman caste, wholly devoted to their worldly duties, ignorant that there was a Buddha born in the world. Now these women were in the habit of conversing together on the unhappiness of their worldly condition, and in consequence they used to go to the tree that surmounted their abode, and pluck the flowers and offer them to Brahmâdeva, with the prayer that they might escape the power of Yama, and be born in heaven (Brahma-heaven). Now Buddha, perceiving their case, and knowing that they had the capacity of being converted, suddenly transported himself with his followers to their place of abode, and then came and sat down near them. The women seeing the wonderful sight, were lost in amazement, and exclaimed, "Brahmâ himself has come to answer our prayers!" But on this a certain Deva answered them, and said, "This is not Brahmâ, but the World-honoured Buddha, who has come to save the world." On this the women bowed down in reverence, and addressed Buddha in these words—"We, indeed, are but women, much polluted, yet we desire, above all things, to escape the power of Yama, and to be born in the highest heaven;" to whom Buddha replied, "May you, indeed, obtain your desire!

But there are two things in the world which are immutably fixed—that good actions bring happiness, and bad actions result in misery. But (it is not generally known that) the joys of heaven as well as the sorrows of earth are both to be avoided. Who, then, is able to pluck and to hold the true joy of perfect rest (the rest of non-action)? Truly ye have understanding, O women!” and therefore he recited these gâthas:

“Who is able to select (conquer?)¹ the earth (i.e., the place of his abode), to escape Yama,² and lay hold of heaven? Who (is able) to repeat the verses of the Law as one who selects choice (excellent) flowers? The enlightened (one) selects the earth, avoids Yama, seizes heaven, illustriously repeats the verses of the Law, is able to cull the flowers of virtue. Knowing that the world is like a hillock of sand,³ that it is unsubstantial as a mirage, he separates the flowery arrows of Mâra,⁴ and escapes from the necessity of birth and death.⁵ Regarding the body as a bubble, as a self-created mirage, he separates the flowery garland of Mâra, and escapes from birth and death.”

And so the 500 women were converted, and, in reply to Ânanda, Buddha explains how these women had formerly lived in the time of Kâśyapa Buddha, and because of their devotion to him, were now privileged to live in the time of Śâkya Buddha, and to be converted by him. And so on another occasion Buddha recited these gâthas :

¹ This is expressed by a difficult passage. The Chinese tseh means “to select” or “pick out,” and the whole verse seems to allude to choosing “a future abode” (bhûmi).

² The expression “lam” in Chinese could hardly have been understood (as a proper name) except by the Pâli translation.

³ Like “froth” (Pâli), v. 46.

⁴ Instead of foo I have been obliged to substitute tsin, an arrow.

⁵ Probably the word sing is a mistake for wang, “King of Death.”

“As many kinds of flowers when waived to and fro scatter their scent far and wide,¹ so wide is the renown of his accumulated merits, who once is born and lives as he ought. The scent of the Vassikî flowers does not travel against the wind, but the (odour) of those who live religiously spreads far and wide—the fame of the virtuous man pervades all places. The scent of sandal-wood and the Tagara,² of the Lotus and Vassikî flower, although real and sensible, is not as the fragrance of (him who walks according to) the precepts. Mean and false in comparison is the scent of the rarest flowers with the fame of him who holds by virtue, the excellency of whose conduct rises to heaven. He who thus lives in perfect agreement with the precepts, who walks circumspectly, and who by fixed thought has obtained release, he has far out-distanced the way of Mâra.”

And on another occasion, when Buddha was residing on the Gridhrakûta Mountain, near Râjagriha, he recited the following gâthas :

“As a ditch³ in the field, close beside the highway, will produce the lily in its midst, and spread far and wide its delightful perfume, so in the midst of life and death (that is, the phenomenal world), beside the way of false speculation (universal inquiry), the wise man diffuses his glad sentiments in becoming a disciple of Buddha.”

¹ Agreeing with v. 53 (the Southern version). It is possible that the symbol “to” in the text ought to be translated “Tagara.”

² Notice should be taken of the symbols used for Vassikî and Tagara.

³ Pâli, v. 58, 59, vv.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

wise, understands nothing of the true doctrine, as a spoon tastes not the flavour of the soup. The man of discernment, frequenting the society of the wise, in a moment perceives the secret of the true doctrine, as the tongue perceives the flavour of the broth. Even the charity of the fool is a cause of sorrow to him; how much more his evil deeds! That deed is ill done that causes repentance hereafter; the reward of which is accompanied by tears and a rueful face.”

On hearing these lines the Brahmachârin^s were converted, and worshipping Buddha, arose and departed.

On another occasion, when a Pratyeka Buddha, called Kâla, entered Nirvâna, after enduring the insults of certain women as he begged his food, the World-honoured uttered these verses:

“The fool and his fellows¹ doing evil are unable to deliver themselves. Misfortune follows them with its certain burning. Their evil deeds must result, when they are completed, in entire destruction. The fool, whilst in the flesh, recognises not the misery he is entailing on himself; but when he sinks into the place of perdition, then he knows his own folly.”

¹ Yu ch'hwang, which may mean simply the “stupid.”

SECTION XIV.

THE WISE MAN (PANDITAVAGGO).

1. THERE was in old time a Brahmachârin just twenty years of age, who, being possessed of brilliant talent, foolishly thought that he could be instructed in no art or accomplishment common in the world. Taking his travels, therefore, he came to a country where he saw a fletcher making his arrows and shaping his bow ; on seeing which he was convinced of his ignorance in this respect ; and so also in another country, seeing a man building a ship, he was equally convinced ; and so again when in another place he saw a man making a royal palace. Having learnt all these arts, and passed successively through sixteen countries, he came back to his own place, and boastfully asked, “ Who is there in the world more acquainted with the arts than myself ? ”

Buddha perceiving his capacity for conversion, changed himself into a Shaman, and coming where he resided, with his robes orderly arranged, and his begging-dish in his hands, stood before him. “ And who are you ? ” said the Brahmachârin. “ I am a man able to govern his body,” replied the Shaman. “ And what is that ? ” inquired the other, on which the Shaman uttered these verses :

“ The fletcher carves and adjusts the horn of which his bow is made ; the pilot manages his ship ; the architect hews his beams ; the wise man governs his body (himself). For as, by way of simile, the solid rock is unshaken by the wind, so the wise man, grave of thought, quails not whether praised or blamed : just as a deep lake (is not easily stirred but remain) tranquil and still), so the wise man hearing the Law (way), his heart is quiet and at rest.”¹

The Shaman having recited these verses, by his supernatural power raised himself in the air, and exhibited the thirty-two superior signs of Buddha's person, on which the Brahmachârin was converted, and obtained the fruit of Rahatship.

2. In old times, when Buddha was residing in Śrâvastî, there was a village about 500 li off, in which dwelt some fifty or sixty families (mountain people). Amongst these there was a certain poor man and his wife, to whom had been born two boys (twins), very lovely to behold, and of incomparable grace. The one they called “Grace” (tih), the other “Fortunate” (fuh). Now it so happened one day the father had returned from his work, and lain down on his bed to rest, whilst the mother was still in the fields. The two children, who were then only seven or eight weeks old, not seeing their father, began to speak reproachfully one with the other, because they were born in such circumstances as they were, and had to fare so badly as they did. The father, overwhelmed with astonishment at hearing the children talking thus, and thinking that they were demons in human shape, resolved to kill them and burn their bodies. Accordingly, he went out into the fields to gather wood for the purpose, and meeting his wife he told her all about it. On this the mother, moved with pity, and scarce believing the truth of the matter, begged a respite for the children for a few days. On the morrow she herself went outside the dwelling and listened, when lo ! she heard the children reproaching one another as before. On this, being persuaded that they were demons in children's form, she consented to the course usual in these cases, that they should be burned (either “burned alive,” or “killed and burned”). At this time Buddha, knowing

¹ Compare vv. 80, 81 of the Pâli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

SECTION XV.

THE RAHAT (ARAHANTAVAGGO).

1. IN old time there was a country called Na-lai (Nara), near the Southern Sea, in which the people gained their livelihood by seeking for pearls and selling sandal-wood. It happened that there were two brothers in this country, whose parents being dead, they agreed to separate and seek their several fortunes. One of them had a slave called Fun-na (Pârna) of very quick intellect, who went out on his journey to seek for some profitable adventure for his master. Having made considerable gain by the sale of some ox-head sandal-wood, he came to Śrāvastî, and meeting with Buddha, was converted and became a Rahat. Returning then to his own people, and exhibiting before them the wonderful powers he possessed—viz., of ascending into the air, and causing water and fire to proceed from his person—he led many of them to become disciples, and finally, at their entreaty, Buddha himself came to convert the King, on which occasion the World-honoured uttered these stanzas :

“ His¹ mind having been quieted, his words and deeds are also at rest ; freed by the truth, in perfect peace he returns to (or finds refuge in) Nirvâna. Free from desire, without entanglements, released from the impediments of the world (three worlds), all thoughts of self-indulgence gone, this man is rightly called Superior. Whether in the hamlet or in the wilderness, on the level land or the high bank of the river, wherever such persons dwell there cannot but be delight. They have found their delight in the wilderness, where men find none; passionless they rejoice, having no ground left for pleasure-secking.”

¹ Compare vv. 96, 98, 99 of the Pâli.

SECTION XVI.

THE THOUSANDS (SAHASSAVAGGO).

1. IN old time, when Buddha was residing at Śrāvastî, there was an old mendicant called Pan-teh-san (Patisena ?) who being by nature cross and dull, could not learn so much as one Gâthâ by heart. Buddha accordingly ordered 500 Rahats day by day to instruct him, but after three years he still was unable to remember even the one Gâthâ. Then all the people of the country (the four orders of people) knowing his ignorance, began to ridicule him, on which Buddha, pitying his case, called him to his side, and gently repeated the following stanza :—“ He who guards his mouth, and restrains his thoughts, he who offends not with his body, the man who acts thus shall obtain deliverance.” Then Patisena, moved by a sense of the Master’s goodness to him, felt his heart opened, and at once he repeated the stanza. Buddha then addressed him further—“ You now, an old man, can repeat a stanza only, and men know this, and they will still ridicule you, therefore I will now explain the meaning of the verse to you, and do you on your part attentively listen.”

Then Buddha declared the three causes connected with the body, the four connected with the mouth, and the three connected with the thoughts, by destroying which men might obtain deliverance, on which the mendicant, fully realising the truth thus explained, obtained the condition of a Rahat.

Now, at this time there were 500 Bhikshunîs (Nuns) dwelling in their Vihâra, who sent one of their number to

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Buddha having now ascended the dais, after having washed his hands, lo ! the arm of Patisena, with the alms-dish in its hand, entered the room. Then the King, the ministers, and all the assembly, seeing this sight, were filled with astonishment, and said—“Ah ! what arm is this ?” On which Buddha replied, “It is the arm of Patisena, the mendicant. He has but just obtained enlightenment, and I desired him to bear my alms-dish behind me ; but the porter has refused him admission, and so his arm has appeared with my begging-dish in the hand.” On this he was admitted and entered the assembly. Then Prasenajit, turning to Buddha, said—“I hear that this Patisena is a man of small ability, and knows only one Gâthâ, how, then, has he obtained the supreme wisdom ?” To whom Buddha replied—“Learning need not be much, conduct is the first thing. This Patisena has allowed the secret virtue of the words of this one Gâthâ to penetrate his spirit ; his body, mouth, and thoughts have obtained perfect quietude ; for though a man know ever so much, if his knowledge reach not to his life, to deliver him from the power which leads to destruction, what benefit can all his learning be ?” and then Buddha repeated the following stanzas :

“Although¹ a man can repeat a thousand stanzas (sections), but understand not the meaning of the lines he repeats, this is not equal to the repetition of one sentence well understood, which is able when heard to control thought. To repeat a thousand words without understanding, what profit is there in this ? But to understand one truth, and hearing it to act accordingly, this is to find deliverance. A man may be able to repeat many books, but if he cannot explain them what profit is there in this ?

¹ Compare these verses with 102 ss. of the Pâli.

But to explain one sentence of the Law, and to walk accordingly, this is the way to find supreme wisdom (to become a Rahat)."

On hearing these words, two hundred Bhikshus obtained deliverance, and the King and his ministers were filled with joy.

2. In days of old, when Buddha was living in the Jetavana Vihâra, at Śrâvastî, preaching his doctrine, there was a certain rich Brahman of that country called Yamata, who was in the habit of asking all the Brahmans of the neighbourhood, upwards of 5000 men, to share in his hospitality, and receive gifts of cattle, slaves, clothes, money, &c., in the middle of every fifth year. On the present occasion, having received these gifts, and joined in the various sacrifices, they came to the place where Buddha was, flushed with joy and elated with pride. On this, Buddha, having reproved them for their folly, uttered the following stanzas :—

"If¹ a man each month repeat a thousand sacrifices, and go on making his bodily offerings without ceasing, this is not equal to that man's conduct who but for a moment, with undivided attention (yih sin, ekachittam), fixes his mind upon the Law. The happiness consequent on one moment of deep reflection exceeds that (which results from) of the sacrifice of the bodies (of untold victims). Although a man for a hundred years worship and sacrifice to the spirit of Fire, his merit is not equal to that of the man who for a moment pays reverence to the Three Holy Ones; the happiness consequent on one such act of homage excels that resulting from all those hundred years."

¹ Compare this with vers. 106, 107 of the Pâli.

On this, the World-honoured proceeded to address Yamata in the following words :¹—

“ There are four kinds of charitable offerings. What are the four ? First, where the gifts are large, and the merit small ; secondly, where the gifts are small, and the merit large ; thirdly, where the gifts are large, and the merit large ; fourthly, where the gifts are small, and the merit also small. And now, with respect to the first, when is the gift large, and the merit small ? In the case of the foolish and deluded man who takes away life for the purpose of offering up sacrifices to the gods, accompanied by wine-drinking, singing, dancing, and the bestowal of wealth. Here the gifts are great, but the merit small indeed. With regard to the case when the gifts are small and the merit small, this is so when, from covetousness and an evil heart, the offerings given to the learned (or religious persons) are small and stint ; in such case the reward also is stint. And when is it that the offerings, though small, entail a large reward ? In the case when, from a principle of love, a man offers to a virtuous person (or religious man) what small gift he has, with a desire to learn from him the principles of true wisdom, this man reaps great reward. And lastly, the case of a great gift securing a great reward, as in the case of one who, realising the vanity of all earthly things, out of a good heart gives his wealth to found monasteries, or to purchase grounds for fruits, with which to make offerings to the Three Holy Ones, or who gives

¹ The sermon which follows is not a part of Dhammapada, but is in prose.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

venerates old age, four happy 'consequences' increasingly attend that man—beauty and strength, and life and peace.”¹

On hearing these words the man was filled with joy, and sought permission to become a disciple, and after a while attained the condition of a Rahat.

¹ Compare this with 109 of the Pâli, where āyu corresponds to Ch. shau, vaṇṇo to sih, sukham to ngan, and balam to lih.

SECTION XVII.

EVIL CONDUCT (PÁPAVAGGO).

1. IN old time, when Buddha was residing at Râjagriha, he sent a Rahat called Sumanta (Su-man-teh) to the country of Ki-pin (Cophen, i.e., Gandhâra) with some personal relics (hair and nail) for a tower-temple (i.e., a temple connected with which was a relic tower or stûpa) in the Southern Mountains, where 500 Rahats constantly dwelt, and every morning and evening burnt incense and conducted worship. At this time there were in the same mountains 500 monkeys, who having seen these men at their prayers, immediately agreed between themselves to erect by the side of a neighbouring deep stream a relic tower of stone and wood in honour of Buddha. This they did, and above it placed the surmounting pole (Tee)¹ with banners and flags. Here they came to worship every morning and evening, even as the religious men of the neighbouring monastery did. Now it happened about this time, owing to the sudden rising of the river, that these monkeys were caught by the torrent, and being unable to escape were drowned. In consequence of their good deeds, however, they were born as Devas in the Trayastriñśas Heaven, where they had palaces, and clothes, and food according to their new condition. Reflecting, then, on ring to the worlds supposed to exist above our own, and over which Buddha rules. The Chinese “ts’ah,” denoting the same thing, is derived from the Sanskrit “Kshetra” (same sense).

¹ The word Tee, as it is used to denote the surmounting ornament of the Buddhist Stûpa, is the same as the Burmese “Htee,” which again is derived from the Pâli “Khetta,” signifying “earths” or “worlds,” refer-

their former lives, they saw that they had been the monkeys who were lying drowned in the valley, and accordingly they descended to earth, and collecting scented wood and other necessities, they made a funeral-pyre on which to burn the 500 bodies. Being observed by some heretical Brahmans who dwelt in the neighbourhood, practising their austerities, and having been asked by them the reason of their conduct, they explained the whole matter, in consequence of which the Brahmans were induced to go to Buddha to learn his system of religion—accompanied by the Dévas. Arrived there, Buddha explained that the 500 monkeys who were drowned and reborn in Heaven had in a former birth been Brahman heretics, who had made ridicule of, and laughed at the conduct of a Shaman, who dwelt in those same mountains, and because of his activity in ascending and descending the crags whilst engaged in building a sacred tower, had called him “Monkey-foot.” For this they had been born as 500 monkeys; but because of their good deed in erecting the small tower beside the stream, they had been now born as Devas. And then Buddha added these stanzas:

“Lightly to laugh at and ridicule another is wrong; he who has thus acted will certainly receive as his reward abundance of tears, according to the guilt or aggravation of his conduct.”

On this the 500 Devas prostrated themselves in adoration, and the 500 Brahmans, being converted, became Rabats.

2. In old time, when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana at Śrāvastî, preaching for the benefit of gods and men, the Prince Koli having imprisoned his father and killed his elder brother, the heir to the throne, proclaimed himself King, and inaugurated his reign by the slaughter of thousands of the Śâkyas, on which occasion the World-honoured one, addressing Mugalin, said:

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XVIII.

PUNISHMENT (DANḌAVAGGO).

1. IN days gone by there was a country called Kin-tai (Gandhâra ?), in which was a very old mendicant afflicted with a very loathsome disease, which caused him to pollute every place he occupied. Being in a certain Vihâra belonging to the place, no one would come near him or help him in his distress. On this Buddha came with his 500 followers, and obtaining all sorts of necessary utensils and warm water, they together visited the place where the old mendicant lay. The smell in the place was so offensive that all the Bhikshus were filled with contempt for the man; but the World-honoured causing Śakra-deva to bring the warm water, then with his own hand (diamond hand) began to wash the body of the mendicant and attend to his maladies. Then the earth shook, and the whole place was filled with a supernatural light, so that the King and his ministers, and all the heavenly host (Devas, Nâgas, &c.) flocked to the place, and paid adoration to Buddha. Having done so, they all addressed the World-honoured, and inquired how one so highly exalted could lower himself to such offices as these, on which Buddha explained the matter thus :

“The¹ purpose of Tathâgata in coming into the world is to befriend these poor and helpless and unprotected—to nourish those in bodily affliction, whether they be Shamans or men of any other religion (Tao-sse)—to help the impoverished, the orphan, and the aged—and by so doing, and persuading others so to do, the consequent merit is so great that all his former vows are hereby accomplished, and he attains the great goal of all life, as the five rivers when they are lost in the sea.”

¹ This and the following sections are introduced into the prose part of the text.

The King then asked as to the former condition of this old mendicant, and why he was born to so sad a lot, to whom Buddha replied :

“In days gone by there was a king called Evil-conduct (Pâpakamma?), who governed his subjects with tyranny and oppression. He used to send out his officers to afflict the people, and with cruel lashes to extort from them all they could get. There was a certain man of eminence about to be whipped, when he begged for mercy as he was a disciple of Buddha. On this the officer laid the whip lightly on him; but, nevertheless, because of his evil deeds he was afterwards born in hell, and repeatedly as a beast, and at last as a man, but always miserably diseased. Now at that time the King was Devadatta, the executioner was this diseased monk, and the eminent man was myself; but because I was the one who begged for mercy, my lot is now to help this wretched man, as he had mercy on me.”

And then he repeated the following lines:—

“He¹ who inflicts pain on the gentle and the good, or falsely accuses the innocent, this man will inherit one of these ten calamities—either a direct visitation from Heaven (by fire, wind, or water); or, if born, a deformed and diseased body; or some spontaneous fiery outbreak,¹ or loss of reason, or some false accusation, or some governmental difficulty, or a gradual loss of worldly substance, or alienation of relatives, or destruction of treasure (crops or grain) by fire or lightning; and when dead, a birth in hell. These are the ten.”

¹ Comparé ver. 137 ss. of the Pâli.

The diseased monk hearing these words, convinced of sin, turned to Buddha and did him reverence, on which he arrived at the condition of a Rahat; and the King also and his followers, filled with joy, took on them the five precepts, and entered the Paths.

2. In days of old, when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana, at Śrāvastî, and preaching his doctrine for the benefit of men and gods, there were in a country to the eastward, called Uttaravati, a company of 500 Brahmans, who had agreed to go together to the residence of a certain Nirgrantha ascetic on the banks of the Ganges, who, by polluting himself with dirt, &c., aspired to the condition of a Rishi. On their way they were overtaken in the desert with thirst. Seeing a tree, and hoping to find some human habitation near, they hastened on to it, but when arrived there they found no sign of life; on this, they raised their voices in lamentation. Suddenly from the tree they heard the voice of the resident Spirit, who asked them why they lamented so, and on hearing the reason, supplied them to the full with drink and meat. The Brahmans, ready to start onward, asked the Spirit what had been his previous history, that he was thus born; on which he explained that having gone to the assembly of priests in Śrāvastî when Sudatta had bestowed the garden on Buddha, he

¹ I cannot translate this passage satisfactorily.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

desires not to get the victory, who is moved by goodwill towards all the world. There is no ground in such a case for ill-will or hate.”

On hearing these words the Brahmans were converted, and became Shamans.

SECTION XIX.

OLD AGE (JARÁVAGGO).

1. BUDDHA was residing in the Jetavana, at Śrāvastî. After having eaten, he began to preach the Law of Eternal Life¹ for the benefit of gods and men, in the presence of the King and his ministers. At this time there were seven men, Brahmans, who had come from a distance, and having bowed at the feet of the World-honoured one, besought him to allow them to dwell near him, and hear his instructions. Having had the permission, they were assigned an upper chamber as their dwelling-place. Having retired there, they began to talk together and laugh loudly. On hearing this, Buddha went to them, and opened his mouth in these words :—

“ What ² (room for) mirth, what (room for) laughter, remembering the everlasting burning (or fire). Surely this dark and dreary (world) is not fit for one to seek security and rest in. Behold this body in its fashioning ; what reliance can it afford as a resting-place, filled with crowded thoughts, liable to every disease. Oh ! how is it men do not perceive its false appearances ? When old, then its beauty fades away ; in sickness, what paleness and leanness—the skin wrinkled, the flesh withered, fol. 9, under the heading of “ Impermanence.” Compare ver. 146 and ss.

¹ “ The Law of sweet dew ” (amātam).

² This verse occurs in Cod. iii., K. I. of the Pâli.

death and life both conjoined. And when the body dies, and the spirit flees, as when a royal personage rejects a (broken) chariot, so do the flesh and bones lie scattered and dispersed. What reliance, then, can one place on the body ? ”

On hearing these words, the Brahmans became sobered and thoughtful, and finally attained to the condition of Rahats.

2. In days of old, when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana, at Śrāvastî, preaching the Law for the good of Devas and men, at this time there was a Brahman village, consisting of some five hundred or more families, in which were also five hundred young Brahman students training themselves in the secret lore of their caste, and filled with disdain for all others, without any reverence for old age or superior rank. Now these five hundred youths, vaunting their own powers of investigating truth, spoke thus : “ As for this Shaman Gotama, he does but self-style himself Buddha ; his talents reach but little way compared with ours ; we ought to challenge him to come here and dispute with us.” Accordingly, they sent one to challenge him ; and so Buddha, with all his disciples, came to the place, and having sat down beside some running water, they ate their food and washed their hands. At this time an old Brahman and his wife passed along through the village, begging their food. Buddha, knowing that formerly this old man had been very rich, and one of the chief ministers of the kingdom, he immediately turned to the young Brahmans, and asked them whether they knew who this old man was ? They all answered at once, “ We know perfectly.” And then Buddha inquired again, “ And who is he ? ” They said, “ He was formerly a great minister, and very rich.” “ Then how is it (Buddha asked) he is now begging his food ? ” To which they replied, “ Because he took no care of his money, and was foolish

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

First, when young and capable of high moral resolves secondly, when rich and possessed of means; thirdly, when happy enough to gain the knowledge of the three honourable ones, and so have the opportunity of widening one's capabilities of merit; fourthly, when by experience a man has learned the vanity of earthly things, to act accordingly. Those who avail themselves of these opportunities will in the end certainly attain wisdom;" and then the World-honoured one added these stanzas:—

“Day and night, striving to get rid of fleshly desires, and at the right opportunity putting forth earnest effort; discovering the truth that all things are impermanent—such a man shall never fall into the pit of destruction. Aiming to learn how to kindle the lamp of reflection, and seeking in the light of experience supreme wisdom (prajñâ), removing all defilements, and avoiding pollution, by this light a man shall discover the ground of escape (Bôdhi).”

The World-honoured having uttered these words, caused the glory of his person to manifest itself, and in consequence the young Brahmans were convinced of his character, and besought permission to enter the church, and at length arrived at perfect deliverance (the condition of Rahats).

SECTION XX.

LOVING THE BODY (SELF) (ATTAVAGGO).

1. IN old time there was a country called To-mo-ho-lo (Damakara?), and about seven lis from the (chief) city there was a Vihâra, in which dwelt 500 Shamans. Amongst these was an aged mendicant named Mo-ho-lu (Makhara?), who, being of a heavy and dull mind, was unable to learn even one Gâthâ, though instructed by the 500 Shamans through many years. On this he was treated contemptuously by the rest, and not allowed to go in their company, but left to sweep the monastery, and look after the cells of the monks. On one occasion the King of the country had asked all the Shamans to assemble at his palace, and accept his hospitality. On this occasion, Makhara, having been left behind as usual, he thought thus with himself—“ I have been born dull and stupid, and cannot even recollect one verse of Scripture. What use is it to live any longer, to be neglected and despised by my fellow-men ? ” On this he took a rope, and going to the back of the garden, he placed himself under a great tree intending to hang himself. At this time Buddha, by his power of religious discernment (eyes of religion), seeing the case of this man, transformed himself at once into the appearance of the Tree-Spirit, and with half his body¹ projecting from the tree, addressed the old monk in these words of expostulation—"Psha! psha! thou (foolish) mendicant, what art thou going to do?" On this Makhara opened out the cause of his grief; on which the Tree-Spirit continued and said—"Do no such thing as this, but listen to my words: In the time of Kâsyapa Buddha, long ago, you were then a Shaman deeply acquainted with the three books (baskets—i.e., Pitakas), and among your 500 brethren you were pre-eminent, in consequence of which you were filled with pride and self-complacency, and despised all others on account of their ignorance; and because you died then without repentance, it has been your lot ever since to be born dull and stupid—what good, then, to destroy yourself?"

¹ This is constantly the sign of a supernatural appearance, as e.g., in in Pl. xci. fig. 4, “Tree and Serpent Worship,” where the Deva of the Bôdhi Tree, or the Vajrâsana under the Tree, is respectfully acknowledging the announcement of Buddha’s birth, and, in so doing, reveals “half his body.” [This scene is frequently referred to in Buddhist books.]

And then Buddha, appearing in all his glory, added these verses:—

"If ¹ a man love himself, let him carefully protect that which he is so anxious about (i.e., himself). If he hope to be delivered from carnal desire, let him learn the right way without indolence (sleep). Himself, this is the first consideration; let him put forth his own power and attain wisdom. Profiting (himself in this way), he may then instruct others. Unwearied in his efforts, he will then gain wisdom. The enlightened man will first govern himself, then in due time he will be able to govern others. Regulating his own conduct (himself), and entering (on the domain of) true wisdom, he must necessarily ascend to the highest place (i.e., become eminent). But if one cannot improve (profit) oneself, how can such an one benefit others; and, on the other hand, what desire (vow) may not be accomplished when oneself is able to lord it rightly over oneself? That

¹ Compare ver. 157 of the Pâli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

“The teaching of the wise¹ is this, that by wisdom we preserve ourselves. The foolish ridicule it—they see, and yet do wickedly; and so by their wicked deeds they reap misfortune, as he who sows the noxious plant (reaps the same). The wicked man in his own person accumulates (receives the fruit of his) guilt; the good man reaps good fruit (merit) in his own person; and so each one for himself prepares the harvest for himself. The concerns of another do not effect one’s case—doing good, then we reap good, just as one who sows that which is sweet (enjoys the same).”²

On hearing these words, the Brahmans were convinced of their folly, and became disciples. The butcher also and his associates were converted, and then the All-Wise returned to the Vihâra.

¹ Chin jin, literally, a supernatural Being. The whole passage, therefore, might be rendered “as the teaching of supernatural (religion), is that by wisdom (taou), we may preserve life (or, our body), &c.”

² This agrees generally with vers. 164, 165, of the Pâli.

SECTION XXI.

THE WORLD (LOKAVAGGO).

1. IN days of old there was a certain Brahman King, whose name was To-mi-seay (Dhamasa?). It came into the heart of this King one day to distribute, according to the fashion of the Brahmans, an unlimited quantity of precious stones, &c., among the followers of his faith, the rule being that every Brahmachârin who came as a recipient (beggar) might take a handful from the heap and go. And so for many days the affair was conducted; and yet the pile of wealth did not appear to diminish. On this, Buddha, knowing the condition of the King, and his aptitude (capacity) for conversion, transformed himself into a Brahmachârin, and went to the spot. The King going out from his palace, when he beheld him approaching, paid him due respect, and conducting him within, inquired what he would desire to receive, and requested him to have no reserve in asking. On this the Brahmachârin replied, "I have come from far, and I desire to beg a few jewels, that I may have enough to build me a house." The King immediately answered, "Most virtuous sir, you may take a handful, and welcome." On this the Brahmachârin took so much from the heap, and then having gone seven paces, he returned and replaced them on the heap. On this the King inquired why he acted thus, in not taking the jewels. Whereupon the Brahmachârin replied, "This handful is indeed enough to enable me to build a house; but afterwards I shall want to take a wife, and for that purpose this handful is not sufficient." On this the King bade him take three handfuls, and welcome. Having done so, and gone seven paces, again he returned and replaced the jewels on the heap. Whereupon the King once more inquired his reason for so doing, to which he replied, "These might be enough to provide me with house and wife, but then I shall have to buy slaves and oxen and horses, and for this purpose the three handfuls are not sufficient." On this the King said, "Take then seven handfuls, and welcome." The Brahmachârin having done so, and gone seven paces, again returned and did as before, saying that these seven handfuls, though enough for the purpose assigned, would yet not suffice for the maintenance and welfare of his children. On this the King bade him take the whole heap of jewels, and use them for the purposes named. Accordingly the Brahmachârin did so, and departed. On this the King, astonished, cried out to him in a loud voice what his reason for so acting might be? To which the man replied, that those who begged sought only things for the present life; whilst those who thought, found out the instability and impermanence of all worldly things, and the ever-accumulating mass of sorrow and pain that resulted from a worldly life. And on this, resuming his own glorious body as Buddha, he added these stanzas:—

"Though a man possessed a heap of jewels as high as heaven, enough to fill the world, not so happy he as one who apprehends the first principles of truth; he who makes vice resemble virtue, and love resemble hate (or, confuses the one with the other), he who confounds the true source of joy with sorrow—that man surely, bereft of reason, causes his own destruction."

Hearing these words, the King was filled with joy, and both he and his ministers received the precepts, and entered the Paths.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

remove, nothing that defiles. All love of earthly things is at an end. I have destroyed the net of lust. Of myself, without any master, have I attained this position ; nor need I now any protector or patron. Alone I stand, without any associate in conduct ; having had this one aim, I have become Buddha (enlightened), and by this, have attained perfect holiness."

Upaka having heard these words, without any spiritual understanding, asked further, " Well, Gotama,¹ which way are you going ? " To which Buddha replied, " I am going to Benares, to sound the drum of the insurpassable Law, which never yet has been heard, by which both Devas and men may attain Nirvâna, even as I now have attained." Then Upaka joyously replied, " Well said ! sadhu ! may you, as you say, be able to declare the Law of Eternal Life ! " And having said so, Upaka turned away on another way, and so lost the chance of finding a teacher to guide him into the right way.² In the middle of that night Upaka died ; on which occasion Buddha, perceiving the fact by his spiritual sight, spoke as follows (after a similar sentiment in prose) :—

" Perceiving truth, pure and unalloyed, delivered from the five paths of destruction (five modes of birth), Buddha has come forth to enlighten the world, to make a way of escape from all sources of sorrow and pain. To be born as a man is difficult ;³ to attain to years (i.e., to live long) is also difficult ; to be born when Buddha is incarnate is difficult ; and to hear the preaching of the Law of Buddha is difficult also.”

¹ We need scarcely remark that the epithet Gotama in the Northern Books is sometimes a mark of disrespect or indifference.

² For this story of Upaka, vide " Romantic Legend," p. 245.

³ Compare ver. 182 of the Pâli, in which I think the expression, "hard is the life of man" (M. M.), may reasonably be changed into the "difficult," &c. This verse is found in the " Sûtra of Forty-two Sections."

On hearing these words, five hundred heavenly visitors were filled with joy, and entered the Paths.

2. In days of old there was a country about 4000 lis to the south of Rājagriha wholly given up to Brahmanic rites, with about a thousand Brahmans (or several thousands) as inhabitants. At a certain period there was a drought in that country, extending over a space of three years. In vain the people had made sacrifices to all their gods—no good resulted. At length the King asked the Brahmachârins how this happened ; to which they replied, “ We must observe the very utmost of the Law, and dismiss certain men to hold converse with Brahma Deva, and request an end of these calamities.” On which the King demanded their intentions, with a view to forward them, to which they replied, “ We require to have twenty chariots, with wood, incense, unguents, flags, and money, and sacrificing vessels.” The King having provided these things, they departed from the city about seven lis, and there, on a level space of earth, they erected their wood on high, and then exhorted one another not to regard their present bodily condition, but to aspire to be born in the heaven of Brahma ; and so at length seven men were induced to consent to ascend the pyre, and be burned upon it. Then, after the usual prayers and ceremonies, they mounted the wood, and awaited the end. But when the light was applied to the lower part, hearing the crackling sound, and affrighted by the prospect of death, they arose and ran here and there, and besought to be rescued—but all in vain ; and then, in distraction, they prayed thus, “ Oh, is there no one in the three worlds to pity us ! Oh, come thou and rescue us !” Hearing these words, Buddha appeared in mid-air above them, and as they were filled with joy, he said :—

“ Truly men seek (through fear) many a refuge ; they resort to mountains and valleys, and spirits residing in trees ; they erect images as gods, and pay religious worship to them, seeking happiness (merit).¹ But such refuge as this is neither fortunate or best ; not one of them is able to save thee from sorrow (or accumulated pain). But he who takes refuge in Buddha, the Law, and the Church, and with clear insight penetrates the meaning of the four truths, he will certainly attain (see) supreme wisdom.² He who seeks personal refuge in these three, finds the most fortunate and the best. In these only, without other refuge, a man may find deliverance from all sorrow.”

On hearing these words, the sound of fire was no longer heard, and the Brahmans and their attendants, as they beheld Buddha (who now appeared) in his glory, were filled with joy, and beholding his miraculous appearances, were converted, and, descending from the pyre, they uttered these words :—

“ Oh, the happiness of seeing the Holy One ! Oh, the happiness of being able to rely on him as present ! Oh, the joy of the man who is able to avoid the company of the foolish, and act well and virtuously by himself ! How happy he who scrupulously guards the path of truth (true perception, or true ways) ; happy he who can repeat the Law ; happy he who avoids discussion (contention) in the

¹ Compare ver. 188 of the Pāli.

² I have accidentally omitted a verse. “ By understanding the four truths, a man escapes from the extreme misery of repeated birth and death ; and to escape the eight calamities of life is to get rid of the whole body of pain.”

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

SECTION XXIII.

REST AND REPOSE (SUKHAVAGGO).

1. IN days of old about 300 lis to the south of Râjagriha there was a village of some 500 or so mountain peasants, whose hearts were estranged from religion, and beyond the usual means of conversion, and yet were not indifferent to the hope of final salvation. On this the World-honoured One, transforming himself into the appearance of a Shaman, went to the village to beg his food, and having gathered sufficient, he left the village and took his seat beneath a neighbouring tree. Whilst thus sitting he entered on a condition of Samâdhi called that of Nirvâna, and so continued for seven days, without moving, and (apparently) without breathing. The men of the village seeing him thus, and believing life to be extinct, said among themselves, "This Shaman is evidently dead; we will collect wood for a funeral pyre, and burn his body." Having done so, they set fire to the wood. After it had gone out Buddha arose from its embers, and manifesting his glorious body in various miraculous ways, he returned to the shade of the tree where he was before, and again seated himself in perfect composure. The villagers, seeing this wonderful occurrence, one and all came near and paid him reverential homage, and said, "We indeed are but poor mountain people, and did not know that you were a god, and therefore prepared the pyre to burn your body on. We confess our fault, and pray forgiveness, and supplicate that no misfortune may befall us in consequence, whether disease, or famine, or drought." On this the World-honoured opened his mouth, and uttered these stanzas :—

“My life is now at rest, with no anger amongst those who are angry (or those who hate). Men indeed on all sides feel anger, but my life (conduct) is free from anger. My life is now at rest, free from disease amongst the diseased ; all men suffer from disease, to me there is none. My life is now at rest, sorrowless in the midst of sorrow ; all men have sorrow, but I have none. My life is now at rest, in perfect peace, without any personal aim (wou wei), feeding on (unearthly) joys, like the bright gods above (Abhâsvaras). My life is now at rest, calm, indifferent, with no thought about ‘what I must do.’ Pile up then the wood; and let the fire encircle me ; but how can it touch such an one as I ?”¹

On this the villagers embraced the faith and became Rahats, and Buddha and his followers returned through the air to the bamboo grove, on which occasion the World-honoured explained to Ananda that in former days, when he had been a Pratyeka² Buddha, he had, underneath this same tree, obtained Nirvâna, and because the villagers had piously burnt his body, and collected his relics and placed them in a casket, and done reverence to them, they were now privileged to hear him preach, and so had obtained the fruition of the Paths. After this explanation, countless Devas obtained knowledge of the Paths.

2. In days of old, when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana, at Śrâvastî, there were four Bhikshus seated under for Pratyeka is “pi-chi,” evidently the translation of the Pâli or Mâgadhî “Pacce(ko).”

¹ Compare Max Müller's note (200) about the words of the King of Mithilâ.

² Observe that the Chinese phrase

a tree, who conversed together thus: "What think you is the greatest misery to bear in all the world?" One said the greatest misery in the world is lust; another said the greatest misery is hunger and thirst; another said it was anger; another said it was fear. Whilst they were thus disputing, without any hope of agreement, Buddha, knowing the case, transported himself to the spot, and inquired what their disputation was about. On this the Bhikshus, having arisen and paid him homage, explained how the case stood. On this the World-honoured explained that they had not got to the bottom of the matter, but that the body itself was the greatest misery, for from the body comes the misery of hunger and thirst, cold and heat, anger, and pride, and lust; and therefore our aim should be to get rid of the body, and thus attain the perfect rest of Nirvâna. And then he added these stanzas:—

"There¹ is no burning greater than lust; there is no distress (poison) worse than hate; there is no misery greater than this body; there is no joy like (its) destruction. Without accordance there can be little joy; small power of distinguishing truth argues little wisdom; by perceiving and seeking for that which is truly great, by this means alone one obtains perfect rest. Now I, the Honoured of the World, fully explain the character of the sorrowless; I fully (am able) to deliver the three worlds; I alone (or by myself alone) have overthrown the whole army of Mâra (the devil)."

Having uttered these words, Buddha explained how that in ages gone by there was a certain Bhikshu possessed of the five supernatural powers (iddhi), who dwelt in the mountains under a tree, practising austerities with

¹ Compare ver. 202 of the Pâli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XXIV.

PLEASURE (PIYAVAGGO).

1. IN days of old, when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana, Vihâra, at Śrâvastî, there were four newly-admitted mendicants who went together and sat under a plum-tree, intending to engage themselves in religious contemplation (dhyâna). At this time the tree was in full bloom, and struck by the beautiful colours and the fragrant perfume of the blossoms, the conversation of the mendicants took the following turn—viz., as to what in all the world was most worthy of love as a source of pleasure. Then one of them said, “I think the greatest happiness in the world is during some moonlight night in spring, when all the trees are in bloom, to wander forth in the country, and take one’s pleasure without constraint.” Another said, “I think the highest pleasure is in joining in some family social gathering, and enjoying the feast and the wine, the music and the dancing.” Another said, “I think the highest happiness is to possess such funds of wealth as to enable one to procure whatever the heart desires, whether it be chariots or horses, clothing or ornaments, such as would make one, on going into the world, the admiration and envy of all beholders.” The fourth said, “And I think the highest happiness to be to possess a wife as beautiful as possible, and to see her clad in all the choicest robes, anointed with the rarest unguents, and always ready for the indulgence of love.” Now Buddha, perceiving that these men were capable of conversion, but had not yet arrived at a knowledge of the impermanency of the six objects of desire, immediately, with a sigh, addressed the four men, and asked them, "What is the subject of your discourse, as you sit here together beneath this tree?" On this they told him truthfully what each one's idea of happiness was. And then Buddha rejoined, "Let there be an end of such discourse, for all these things (which you desire) are the causes of (way of) sorrow, misfortune, fear, and calamity. This is not the way of eternal peace, the system of the highest joy. The flowers of spring shall fade in autumn, and fall in utter decay before the winter cold. All those friends in whose society you place such reliance for happiness, ere long shall be scattered and separated far and wide. That wealth you prize, and that beauty of wife, and those pleasures, alas! are the causes of every misfortune—hatred in families, wreck of body, future misery! Wherefore, O Bhikshus! be sure that the highest bliss is to leave the world, to search after supreme wisdom, to covet a condition of entire indifference, to desire nought for one's self, to aim at Nirvâna." And then the World-honoured uttered these stanzas:—

"From¹ love (or lust) comes sorrow, from lust comes fear; where there is no lust (or, no ground for lust), what sorrow, what fear can there be? From pleasure comes sorrow, from pleasure comes fear; where there is no ground for pleasure, what grief or fear can there be? From covetousness (greed) comes sorrow, from greed comes fear; where one is free from covetousness, there can be no sorrow or fear. But to be greedy to fulfil perfectly the requirements (moral rules) of the Law—to be truthful in everything (or, to be perfectly truthful), to be modest in everything, to conduct his own business (to order himself) according to what is right—this is to lay a foundation of love from all. The idea of pleasure not yet produced, his thoughts and words composed, his mind unaffected by any bewilderment of love, he indeed shall mount above (or cut off) the Stream.”¹

¹ Compare vers. 212, 213, ss. of the Pâli.

[Having uttered these words, Buddha explained that in days gone by there was a King who, having entertained four other neighbouring Kings, and indulged them in every pleasure, similar questions to the above arose amongst them, and at last the King who was the host explained the matter as Buddha had done, on which occasion the four Kings were the four Bhikshus, and the chief King was Buddha himself.]

¹ He is called “uddhamsotas” (qui sublime fertur) F.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

“Amongst men there is no one who is not blamed, from old time till now.¹ Since they blame the man of many words, they blame the patient and quiet man ; they also blame the man who seeks the happy medium ; there is always blame in the world. Those who desire to find fault with the righteous (holy) man are never able to discriminate with impartiality (take a middle course) ; they blame him entirely or they praise him entirely, but it is all done from some false idea of profit or fame.² But he whom the enlightened and wise praise, and whom they consider and call upright and good, a man of true wisdom and innocent life, without any ground for censure in himself, as a Rahat for purity, there is no blame for him—such an one the gods themselves must admire, even Brahma and Śakra must praise such an one.”

Having concluded these stanzas, the World-honoured One related this anecdote :—“There was in days gone by a certain King, who loved above all things the flesh of the wild goose for his daily food. Consequently he used to keep a hunter (or fowler) for the express purpose of snaring these birds, and providing flesh for the royal table. One day the fowler having gone out for this purpose, there came a flock of geese, 500 in number, with their king at their head, and alighted in search of food just where the snares were set. In consequence the king of the birds was trapped, and remained entangled in the toils. Then the rest, in consternation, flew round and round the place, but would not leave it. One of the geese in particular kept flying close by the net, and, undaunted by the arrows of the fowler, kept uttering piteous cries, whilst the drops of blood (from her wounds) kept falling on the ground, and so from morn till eve she continued to act. Then the fowler, moved with compassion, liberated the king of the birds, and joyfully he flew away to rejoin the flock. On relating this to the King, he highly approved of what he had done in liberating the bird. Now at that time, Buddha said, I was the king of the wild geese, Ânanda was the faithful bird that would not leave me, you, O King! were the King of the country, and the huntsman was Devadatta, who has ever sought to do me harm (but on this occasion I do not withhold from him some portion of praise for his humane conduct) [such at least appears to be the moral of the story].”

¹ Compare ver. 227 of the Pāli.

² These verses are very obscure.

SECTION XXVI.

IMPURITY (MALAVAGGO).

1. THERE was once a man who had no brothers, but only one little son, who was much beloved by both his parents. They procured for him means of instruction, and fondly hoped that he would be an honour to their house. But, alas! he was careless and negligent, and learned nothing. In consequence of this his parents took him to their home, and hoped he would be useful in the management of the house. But he was idle and dirty in his ways, and altogether a grief to them. In consequence of this he was slighted by all the neighbours, and became an object of contempt amongst his friends, and almost hateful to his parents. Deeply touched by this, he sought some comfort in religious exercises, but found no help in all his penances and prayers to the gods. At last, hearing that Buddha was the all-wise Teacher who could meet the necessities of his case, he came to him and begged his help. To whom Buddha replied, "If you would find comfort in my society, the first thing for you to learn is purity of conduct. Go back, therefore, to your home, and learn to obey your parents, recite your prayers, be diligent in your daily occupations, let no love of ease tempt you to neglect cleanliness of person or decency of dress; and then, having learned this, come back to me, and you may perhaps be allowed to enter into the companionship of my followers." And then the World-honoured added these stanzas:—

“Absence¹ of (daily) prayer is the disease of

¹ Compare ver. 241 of the Pāli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XXVII.

FIRMLY HOLDING BY THE LAW (DHAMMATTHVAGGO).

1. THERE was once a very old Brahman, called Sa-che (Sacha or Satya) Nirgrantha, celebrated for his acuteness in discussion. He had 500 disciples, and all of them were so self-opinionated with regard to their superior learning that they used to clothe themselves with iron plates, lest their wisdom should overflow and run to waste (sic.). Now when Sacha heard that Buddha had come into the world, and was converting men by his superior wisdom, he was filled with jealousy, and could not rest at night from very envy, and therefore, addressing his disciples, he said, "I hear that the Shaman Gotama professes to be a Buddha. I will go and ask him a few questions, and make him blush for shame when he finds he cannot answer them." Accordingly, he with his followers went to the Jetavana (Vihâra), and as they stood without seeing the glory of Buddha's person, like the sun when he first comes forth in his strength, they were overpowered and confused by their feelings, and so passing through the door they came before Buddha, and did him reverence. On this Buddha requested them to be seated. Being so seated, the Nirgrantha asked Buddha as follows:—"Who is the just man? Who is the learned man? Who is the reverend man? What is true beauty and grace?¹ What is a Shaman? Who is a true Bhikshu? and who is the truly enlightened? and who the obedient man (who respectfully observes the rules of moral conduct)? If you are able, be pleased to answer these questions for the sake of my followers.”

Or, Who is the upright man? (twan ching).

On this the World-honoured, perceiving exactly how the case lay, answered in these stanzas :—

“The man who is always anxious and desirous to learn, who walks uprightly, who ponders on and considers the character of precious wisdom, this man is called Just (i.e., Righteous; one who has attained the way, or Bôdhi). And who is the man of Knowledge? He who depends not on any fine distinction of words—who is free from fear and from apprehension, who stands by what is right—he is the man of Knowledge. And who is the Reverend man (aged)? Not he who has come to old age (sexegenarian)—his form bent, his hair white—for with all that he may be but a fool. But he who ponders on and inquires into the Law (the Dharma), who regulates and restrains his conduct, (is full of) love and virtue, who is able to penetrate into hidden secrets, and is pure—this man is rightly called ‘Reverend.’ And who is the graceful and perfect man? Not he who possesses beauty of form like the flowers (that charm us); not he who covets and longs for the empty vanities of personal adornment; not he whose words and conduct are opposed to one another; but he who is able to give up every vicious way, who has got rid of it from the very root, who is enlightened without a remnant of hatred—this man is truly graceful and upright (or respectable, i.e., admirable in conduct).¹

¹ The phrase twan ching properly means “upright in conduct.”

And who is the Shaman? Not he who is shaven perforce, who speaks untruth, and covets possession, or who is a slave of desire like the rest of men; but he who is able to put an end to (to compose) every wicked (desire), to silence every personal preference, to quiet his mind, and put an end to thought—this man is called a Shaman. And who is called a Bhikshu? Not he who at stated times begs his food; not he who walks unrighteously (heretically), but hopes to be considered a disciple, desiring to establish a character (as a religious person), and that is all; but he who gives up every cause (karma) of guilt, and who lives continually and purely, who by wisdom is able to crush every evil (inclination)—this man is a true Bhikshu. And who is the truly enlightened (or the wise man)? Not he who is simply mute, whilst the busy work of his mind is impure—merely accommodating himself to the outer rule and that is all; but he whose heart is without preference (indifferent), whose inward life is pure and spiritual (empty), perfectly unmoved and dead to this or that (person or thing)—this man is called an inwardly enlightened man (Muni?). And who is a man of Bôdhi (an Ariya or ‘elected one’)? Not he who saves the life of all things, but he who is filled with universal benevolence, who has no malice in his heart—he is a man of Bôdhi. And the man who observes the Law is not he who talks much, but one who keeps his body (himself) in subjection to the Law (Religion), although he be a plain, untaught man, always guarding the way

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

SECTION XXVIII.

THE WAY (MAGGAṬṬAGGO).

1. IN days of old there was a Brahman, who when young had left his home for the purpose of religious seclusion, and who remained a solitary student till he was sixty years of age, but even after this long period he was unable to arrive at supreme wisdom (Bôdhi). Now, according to the law of the Brahmans, if a man at sixty years of age has not reached wisdom, it is his duty to return to his home and marry a wife. Accordingly, the man having so done, there was born to him a very graceful boy, who when seven years of age, being already deeply read in the books of his religion, and possessed of wonderful dialectic skill, was suddenly struck by a fatal disease and died. The father, overwhelmed by sorrow, gave himself up to immoderate grief, and was quite unable to control himself. He threw himself on the corpse of his child, and lay there as one dead. On recovering himself, the child's body was enshrouded and coffined—the father having been remonstrated with by his relatives and those of his caste—and finally taken without the city for interment. On this occasion the Brahman began to reflect with himself thus—“What use is it thus giving way to tears? It is not of any service; but I will go at once to the abode of Chen-lo-wang (Yamarâja), and beg him humbly to give me back my child alive.” On this the Brahman, having gone through certain religious rites and offered flowers and incense, departed from his home, and wherever he came he asked of all he met whether they knew where Yamarâja held his court and ruled. After wandering onwards thus for several thousand lis, he came to a deep mountain pass, where he met with a party of Brahmans who had acquired supreme wisdom. He inquired again of these if they could tell him where Yamarâja ruled and held his court. To this they replied, "And why do you, honourable sir, desire to know?" On this he told them his sad grief, and explained his intention to beg back his child from the God of the lower world. Then all the Brahmans, pitying his self-delusion, replied—"No mortal man can reach the place where Yama reigns; but about 400 lis to the westward of this place there is a great valley, in the midst of which there is a city. In this city the gods and heavenly spirits, who sometimes dwell among men, take up their abode, and Yama, on the eighth day of the month, constantly visits the spot. By going there, and practising a strictly religious mode of life, you may, honourable sir, see the King of the Dead." Then the Brahman, rejoiced to hear this news, departed, and arriving at this valley, lo! in the midst of it he saw a beautiful city with palaces, and towers, and residences, like those in the Trâyastriṅśhas Heaven. Then coming before the gate, he began to burn incense, and recite his religious formularies (Mantras), with a view to gain admission and obtain sight of Yamarâja. At length he was admitted into the dread presence of the King, and, on being asked his wish, he related his case as before. To him the King thus replied—"What you ask, honourable sir, is pious and good of you. Your son is now in the Eastern garden disporting himself there; take him and go." On this the Brahman forthwith hastened to the place, and there he saw his loved child playing with other children. He immediately ran to him, and embracing him, with the tears coursing down his cheeks, exclaimed—"How can I forget you, my child, over whom I have watched so long and lovingly! Remember you not me, my child, your father? Do you not recall our grief as we tended you in your sickness, my child?" But the boy repelled the embrace of the Brahman, and upbraided him for using such foolish terms as father and child, who perish as the grass. "In my present state," he added, "I know no such words, and I am free from such delusive thoughts." On this the Brahman, with many tears, departed; and as he went he bethought himself of the Shaman Gôtama, and he resolved to go to him and lay bare his grief, and seek for some consolation. Accordingly he arrived at the Jetavana, and having paid the usual homage, he explained his circumstances, and how his child had refused to come back with him. To him replied the World-honoured—"Truly you are self-deluded and foolish, for when the spirit of a dead man departs, know you not that it forthwith receives another bodily form, and then all the relative terms of father, son, wife, mother, are at an end, just as a guest who leaves his lodging has done with it as though it were a thing of the past? Sad is your case, and much to be pitied, not to know that such changes will ever go on till you reach a condition of true wisdom, and give up, once for all, every thought about such worldly things as these. In this way alone can you make an end of future birth and death, and become for ever free." And then he added these stanzas :—

"Men concern themselves about the matters of wife and child; they perceive not the inevitable law of disease (and death), and the end of life which quickly comes, as a bursting torrent (sweeping all before it) in a moment.¹ Then neither father or mother can save one; what hope, then, can be placed in all one's relatives (kinsfolk)? At the end of life parent and kinsman are as a blind man set to look after (keep) a burning lamp. A wise man understanding this should carefully practise himself in

¹ Compare ver. 287 of the Pâli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XXIX.

WIDE AND DIFFUSIVE (SENTENCES).¹

1. IN days of old when Buddha was residing in the country of Śrāvastî, preaching his doctrine for the conversion of the various orders of creatures (gods, nâgas, men, &c.), it happened that the king of the country, who was called Prasenajita, had gone on three occasions with his ministers to hear Buddha's discourses. Now at this time the king had given way to much self-indulgence in the way of luxurious living and other gratifications of the senses, in consequence of which he had become sleek and fat, and being so, he suffered from various ailments, such as flatulency and excessive drowsiness and heaviness, so that he could scarcely rise up without inconvenience, and was always more or less a sufferer from discomfort.

In this condition he once came to the place where Buddha was, and leaning on the arms of his attendants, he took his seat, and with clasped hands addressed the teacher thus:—"World-honoured! pardon, I pray, my want of due respect in not saluting you as I ought, but I know not what ailment possesses me that I am become so fat! and it is this that pains me so that I can pay none of the usual respects to your person." To which the Lord replied—"Mahârâja! there are five things which always produce the condition of which you complain: 1st, constantly eating; 2d, love of sleep; 3d, love of pleasure; 4th, absence of thought; 5th, want of occupation. These are the things that cause corpulency and grossness of habit ; if you would escape from this condition, then you must give up your luxurious living, and afterwards you will become thin again. And then the Lord added these stanzas :—

¹ Translated "Miscellaneous" from the Pâli pakinnako.

“ A man ought to recollect and consider at every meal to exercise self-control, and thus avoid those aches and pains to which we are constantly liable ; by allowing time for taking food, he causes his life to be prolonged.”

On hearing these verses, the king was so gratified that he ordered his chief cook to remember them, and to recite them in his presence before and after every meal. By doing thus the king was able to restrain himself, and gradually recovered his lightness of body and animal spirits, at which he was so rejoiced, that one day he went afoot to the place where Buddha was, and coming into his presence he paid him homage. On the Lord requesting him to be seated, he inquired, “ Where, O king, are your horses and chariot, how is it that you have come here afoot ? ” On which the king answered with joy—“ By attending to what Buddha on a former occasion taught me, I have become light of body again, so that I find no difficulty whatever in walking as I have to the place where we are now assembled.” Then Buddha addressed the king as follows :—“ Mahârâja ! it is because men do not consider the impermanence of things in the world that matters are as they are. They nourish and cherish their bodies and their appetites, not remembering even their own comfort (happiness) in so doing, and thus the man dies and his spirit departs, whilst his body decays in the tomb. The wise man nourishes his soul (spirit), the foolish man nourishes his body. If you can understand this, then you may prepare yourself to receive the sacred teaching (of my doctrine),” and then the Lord added these verses :—

“How impermanent is man! he grows old as the stalled ox, fat, and fleshy, and strong, but he has no saving wisdom; without thought of life and death, and the perpetual troubles involved in them, thinking only of the body and its wants, and thus adding to his sorrows without prospect of escape. But the wise man understanding (the cause of) sorrow, on this account lets his body go; he destroys all thought (about it), he cuts off desire, and thus making an end of all lustful appetites, he also puts an end to renewed birth.”

The king having heard these words and understood them, at once received enlightenment, and others who heard them in great numbers, arrived at the “eyes of the law” (religious illumination).

2. In days of old there were seven mendicants, who together resorted to the mountain wilds for the purpose of acquiring supreme wisdom. After twelve years’ fruitless effort, they began to reason amongst themselves and say: “To acquire supreme wisdom is very hard; to mortify one’s body and cramp one’s limbs, and to endure cold and pain without interval, and to beg one’s food and receive such scant supplies, all this is hard. To persevere in the path (of duty) so as to avoid any fault (sin) is hard. Why then do we any longer consume away our life in the mountain wilds? Surely this course is not so agreeable as to return home and establish our families, and marry wives and have children, and enjoy ourselves to the end of our days.” On this the seven men agreed to leave the mountains, and so went on their way homeward.

Now Buddha, knowing their case, and perceiving there was a possibility of their salvation, out of pity to them, knowing that their impatience in religious exercises would, if allowed to go on, end in their ruin, transformed himself

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

man is also hard.¹ To dwell in a religious community on terms of perfect equality as to worldly goods is difficult; but difficult beyond comparison is the possession of worldly goods (or, 'it is difficult not to transgress in having such goods'). To beg one's food as a mendicant is hard, but what can a man do who does not restrain himself? By perseverance the duty becomes natural, and in the end there is no desire to have it otherwise. Having faith, then duty is easily accomplished; from following in the path of duty (i.e., moral duty) a man greatly enriches himself, and from this, moreover, it results that wherever he is, by whomsoever seen, he is respected (cherished). Sitting alone, occupying one place for sleep, ceaselessly pursuing one line of conduct (walk, or action), jealously guarding one upright (or correct) state of mind, there will be of necessity joy to such a man (though) living in the forest."

On hearing these words the seven mendicants, filled with shame on account of their behaviour, bowed themselves down at the Lord's feet, and returning to the mountain wilds, and continuing to guard "one perfect heart," they attained supreme wisdom, and became Rahats.

¹ There is a general agreement here with ver. 302 of the Pâli.

SECTION XXX.

HELL (NIRAYAVAGGO).

1. IN olden time there was in the country of Śrāvastî a certain Brahman teacher called Purâna Kâśyapa (Pou-lan-ka-ye), who had five hundred followers, who went about the country with their master, and were greatly respected by the King and people. Now it came to pass that after Buddha had attained supreme wisdom, and when with his disciples he had come to Śrāvastî, that, on account of his personal dignity, and the character of his teaching, the King and people paid him great respect. On this Kâśyapa was full of jealousy, and he determined to destroy (overthrow) the World-honoured in argument, and cause his death. Accordingly he went, accompanied by his followers, to meet the King, and having found him, he spake thus: "In former days, Mahârâja, you and the people used to attend to me as a teacher, and supply my wants; but since this Sramana Gôtama has arrived here, who falsely says he has become enlightened (Buddha), you have left me, to attend on him. I desire, therefore, that you would allow a discussion between us, and whoever is defeated in argument let him be put to death." The King being pleased with the proposition, submitted it to the World-honoured One, who consented to meet Kâśyapa, as he wished, at the expiration of seven days. Accordingly the King prepared a place standing eastward of the city, smooth and wide, on which he erected two lofty thrones, and adorned them with all sorts of flags and decorations. On these the two disputants were to sit, with their adherents beneath, and the King and his court between the two. The day having come, Kâśyapa and his followers arrived first, and having ascended his throne, lo ! an evil spirit, knowing the envy that burned in the heart of the Brahman, caused a sudden storm to arise, which blew down the seat which he occupied, and filled the whole arena with dust and flying sand. But now Buddha arrived, and having taken his place, the King came forward and entreated him by his power to convert the people to his doctrine, and confute the heretical views of his opponent. On this the Lord ascended into the air, and exhibited his glory in causing fire and water to proceed from his body ; and after various miraculous changes in his appearance, he returned once more to his seat. Then the Nâgas and spirits of the air caused flowers and pleasant perfumes to fall, whilst melodious chants were heard in the sky, and the earth and heavens were shaken. Then Purâna Kâśyapa, knowing that he had no real claim to the character of a supreme teacher, hung down his head in shame, and dared not lift up his eyes. On this a diamond-Litchavi (hero of Vaiśâlî), raising his mace, from the head of which proceeded sparks of fire, over Kâśyapa, asked him why he did not also display such wonderful changes as those just witnessed ? Whereupon Kâśyapa and his followers fled in every direction, and Buddha and his disciples returned to the Jetavana Vihâra, in Śrâvastî. After this Kâśyapa, having met an old female disciple, who ridiculed him for attempting to dispute with Buddha, he came to the banks of the river, and told his disciples that he was now going to ascend to the heaven of Brahmâ, and if after casting himself into the river he did not return, that they might know he had ascended to that heaven. Accordingly he threw himself in, and not returning, his disciples concluded he had gone to heaven ; and they also, desiring to join him there, threw themselves one by one into the river, and were lost—going to hell. Then Buddha explained that the two great crimes of Kâśyapa which led

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XXXI.

THE ELEPHANT (NÁGAṆAGGO).

1. IN days of old, before Rahula had attained to supreme wisdom, his natural disposition being somewhat low and disorderly, his words were not always marked by love of truth. On one occasion Buddha had ordered him to go to the Kien-tai (Ghanda or Ghanta?) Vihâra, and there remain guarding his mouth (tongue), and governing his thoughts, at the same time diligently studying (or observing) the rules of conduct laid down in the Scriptures. Rahula, having heard the command, made his obeisance and went. For ninety days he remained in deep shame and penitence. At length Buddha repaired to the place, and showed himself; on seeing him, Rahula was filled with joy, and reverently bowed down and worshipped him. After this, Buddha having taken the seat provided for him, he desired Rahula to fill a water-basin with water and bring it to him, and wash his feet. Having done so, and the washing being over, Buddha asked Rahula if the water so used was now fit for any purpose of domestic use (drinking, &c.); and on Rahula replying in the negative, because the water was defiled with dust and dirt, Buddha added: "And such is your case, for although you are my son, and the grandchild of the King, although you have voluntarily given up everything to become a Shaman, nevertheless you are unable to guard your tongue from untruth and the defilement of loose conversation, and so you are like this defiled water—useful for no further purpose." And again he asked him, after the water had been thrown away, whether the vessel was now fit for holding water for drink; to which Rahula replied, "No," for the vessel is still defiled, and is known as an unclean thing, and therefore not used for any purpose such as that indicated; to which Buddha again replied, "And such is your case, by not guarding your tongue, &c., you are known and recognised as unfit for any high purpose, although you profess to be a Shaman." And then once more lifting the empty basin on to his foot, and whirling it round and round, he asked Rahula if he were not afraid lest it should fall and be broken; to which Rahula replied that he had no such fear, for the vessel was but a cheap and common one, and therefore its loss would be a matter of small moment. "And such is your case," again said Buddha, "for though you are a Shaman, yet being unable to guard your mouth or your tongue, you are destined, as a small and insignificant thing, to be whirled in the endless eddies of transmigration — an object of contempt to all the Wise." Rahula being filled with shame, Buddha addressed him once more: "Listen, and I will speak to you in a parable. There was in old time the king of a certain country who had a large and very powerful elephant, able to overpower by its own strength five hundred smaller elephants. This king, being about to go to war with some rebellious dependency, brought forth the iron armour belonging to the elephant, and directed the master of the animal to put it on him, to wit, two sharp-pointed swords on his tusks, two iron hooks (scythes) on his ears, a crooked spear on each foot, an iron club (or ball) attached to his tail; and to accompany him were appointed nine soldiers as escort. Then the elephant-master was rejoiced to see the creature thus equipped, and trained him above all things to keep his trunk well coiled up, knowing that an arrow piercing that in the midst must be fatal. But lo! in the middle of the battle the elephant, uncoiling his trunk, sought to seize a sword with it.

On which the master was affrighted, and, in consultation with the king and his ministers, it was agreed that he should no more be brought into the battle-field." In continuation, Buddha said: "Rahula! if men committing the nine faults only guard their tongue as this elephant was trained to guard his trunk, all would be well. Let them guard against the arrow that strikes in the middle! let them keep their mouth, lest they die, and fall into the misery of future births in the three evil paths!" And then he added these stanzas:—

"I am like the fighting elephant, without any fear of the middle arrow (the arrow wounding the middle part). By sincerity and truth I escape the unprincipled man (lawless man). Like the elephant, well subdued and quiet, permits the king to mount on his trunk (offers his trunk for the king to ascend), thus tamed is the reverend man, he also endures truthfully and in faith."

Rahula, hearing these words, was filled with sorrow for his careless disregard of his words, and gave himself up to renewed exertion, and so became a Rahat.

2. In days of old, when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana of Śrāvastî, preaching his doctrine for the sake of angels and men, at this time there was a certain nobleman, a householder (grihapati), named Atidharma (ho-ti-wan), who, having come to the place where Buddha was, after the customary homage, stood on one side and said: "World-honoured! whenever I undertake any religious duty, such as making an offering or other service, I feel harassed and oppressed by some selfish feeling or other, that destroys my peace of mind. Would that of your great love you would explain this." Then the Lord bade him sit down, and forthwith asked him his name, and whence he came. On this, again prostrating himself, he

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

and when bound does not eat a morsel, and only longs to be free; so this mind of mine, in its natural state, went wandering at large, and ever seeking a resting-place, but now I have subdued it, and I can hold it, as the master with the hook holds the elephant. To be glad in the possession of Reason (Bôdhi), and not to let it escape, to be able at any time to hold in and control the mind, this is to be saved from bodily suffering, as the elephant escapes from the ditch into which he has fallen."

The Grihapati, on hearing these words, was led to serious reflection, and eventually attained to a condition of enlightenment, whilst countless others were converted to the truth.

SECTION XXXII.

LUST (TANHÁVAGGO).

1. IN days of old when Buddha was residing in the Grīdhra-kūta mountain, near Rājagriha, preaching the inestimable doctrine for the sake of angels and men, there was a certain man who, having made up his mind to leave his family and become a recluse, came to the place where Buddha was, and desired permission to enter the community (church). On this Buddha required him (after he had permitted him to become a disciple) to go sit beneath a tree in the solitude, and give himself up to meditation. On this the Shaman departed into the mountain wild, more than a hundred lis from the Vihāra, and there gave himself up to a solitary life. After three years of self-denial, his heart being still unsubdued, he desired to give up his profession and to return to his home again, saying thus to himself, “This life of asceticism is troublesome and painful, and not to be compared with the happiness derived from domestic society. I will, therefore, return to my wife and family and enjoy myself.” On this he made as though he would leave the mountain and return home. Then Buddha, by his omniscience, seeing the condition of this disciple, and knowing that he had a capacity for salvation, transformed himself into the form of a Shaman, and went to meet him on the way. On encountering one another, the transformed Shaman addressed the other and asked whence he came and whether he was going. On this they agreed mutually to rest awhile and sit down together on a convenient spot (level ground)

Seated thus, the disappointed Shaman explained to the other his condition, and confessed that he was going back home from a feeling of failure in his religious exercises. Now it happened while he was speaking, that an old monkey leaving the tree in which he lived, came down into the open and disported himself; then the assumed Shaman asked the other, why was this; to which the last replied: "I have often observed this same monkey come down and behave himself thus, and the reasons for his so doing are two,—1st, he is rejoiced to be free from the care of providing for his wife and his belongings; and 2dly, he is worn and hurt by constantly climbing the tree in which his family live, and so is glad to escape the labour of so doing: for these two reasons he leaves the tree and enjoys himself in the open ground. But meanwhile, as the two were conversing, the monkey retreated from the open space, and re-climbed the tree, on which the strange Shaman addressed the other, and asked if he perceived this, and how he explained it. On which the latter said that it was in consequence of fear and uncertainty that the monkey had gone back to his home; on which the other rejoined: "Such is the case with yourself; it was the anxieties caused by your wife and family that first induced you to find release in these mountain wilds, but now owing to doubt and uncertainty, you are going back to the world, and by so doing you expose yourself to all the evil consequences of renewed birth and consequent death. Whereupon he added these verses:

“As ¹ a tree, as long as its root is firm and safe, although cut down, still survives and produces fruit; so, unless the remnants of lust are destroyed and uprooted, (a man) must return again and again to receive sorrow. The monkey, away from the

¹ Compare ver. 338 of the Pāli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

a desire to save alms, used to order his servant to shut his door and fasten his windows whenever he took his meals, so that no beggar should molest him with his importunities. And so no religious person (Shaman) could ever gain admittance, or stand in the presence of this Brahman. One day having desired his wife to kill a fowl and make a highly savoury dish of the same, they both sat down together to eat it, the doors and the windows having first been closed—and between them their little child, into whose mouth they both occasionally put scraps of the savoury dish. Now Buddha, knowing that there was a capacity for conversion in this man's case, transformed himself into the appearance of a Shaman, and waiting till the master of the house had finished his meal he placed himself before his chair, or seat, and recited the usual formula. "He who gives little or much (or he who gives a little of his abundance) in charity, lays up for himself a great reward." The Brahman, raising his head and seeing the Shaman (as it seemed), began to abuse him and said, "You call yourself a religious mendicant, do you? and yet have no better manners than this, to force yourself into my presence when at my meals with my family?" To which he replied, "It is you, my lord, who ought to be ashamed—I need not feel shame for begging as a mendicant." The Brahman then replied—"And what shame should I feel for eating thus with my wife in comfort?" "You, my lord, who have killed your father, and married your mother, and thus involved yourself in family disgrace, and feel no shame, nevertheless upbraid me and would put me to shame for begging a little food," and then he recited the following verses:—

"As the sprouting creeper which is not cut off (at the root), such is the case of the man who, with covetous desire, partakes of food; ever cherishing evil thoughts and multiplying family discords (tombs), such is the constant employment of the ingorant man. Hell, indeed, has its gyves and fetters, but the wise man regards not these as captivity; the foolish man who is immersed in cares about wife and child and their personal adornment, he it is who is in real captivity. The wise man regards lust as the imprisonment of hell, as the hard bound fetter from which it is difficult to escape, and therefore he desires to separate this and cut it off for ever, that being free from any such cares (or, desires), he may find rest and peace.”¹

The Brahman on hearing these words inquired as to their meaning, on which the Shaman explained, that in former years the bird (cock) which he had just eaten was his father, that the little boy his son had been a Raksha, and had eaten the father, and that his wife had been in former days his mother—and thus it was he was involved in the utmost disgrace. On hearing these words the Brahman, filled with fear, besought Buddha, who had now assumed his glorious appearance, to instruct him in the rules of his society, and finally obtained release and entered the first path.

3. In days of old when Buddha was residing at the Jetavana Vihâra near Śrâvastî, there was a young Bhikshu, who, in going through the streets of the city on a begging excursion, cast eyes on a girl of exceeding beauty, and was filled with passion for her. Being unable to conquer his desire, he fell sick, and was unable to eat or sleep, and pined away daily. On this a fellow disciple went to him, and asked him how it was he suffered thus, on which the first revealed the whole matter to the other, and in the end they both went to the place where Buddha was, and explained the thing to him. On this Buddha promised to find a remedy for the Bhikshu's malady, and forthwith desired him to accompany him with his followers to the city. On going to the house where the maiden had dwelt, they found she had now been dead three days, and the house was filled with mourners, who wailed and wept incessantly. Then pointing to the offensive corpse, Buddha asked the Bhikshu, if it was that which had inflamed him with passion? And he then explained how all things that exist are equally perishable and inconstant, and that only through ignorance of this do men set their hearts upon them, and afterwards he added these verses:—

¹ Compare vers. 345, 346 of the Pâli.

“At the sight of beauty the heart is at once ensnared, because it considers not the impermanency of all such appearances. The fool regarding the outward form as an excellency, how can he know the falseness of the thing, for like a silkworm¹ enveloped in its own net (cocoon), so is he entangled in his own love of sensual pleasure. But the wise man, able to separate himself and cast off all this, is no longer entangled, but casts away all sorrows. The careless and idle man considers that such indulgence of sense is not contrary to purity, and so going on still indulging such thoughts, he is bound as a captive in hell; but the wise man, destroying all thoughts about such things, and ever remembering the impurity of such indulgence, by this means comes out of captivity, and so is able to escape from the grief of repeated old age and death.”

The youthful Bhikshu, seeing the dreadful sight before him, and having heard the verses just recited, turned with ¹ This seems to correspond to the “spider” simile in ver. 347 of the Pâli.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

her there, and then he stabbed her, and afterwards killed himself. The servants, finding how the case stood, hastily went to the man's rich relation and told him all the circumstances; on this he came with all the people round about, and seeing the sad sight he was filled with grief, and finally buried them according to the fixed rules of the country. Afterwards hearing of Buddha, and the comfort which he was able to give by the preaching of his word, he came with all his attendants to the place where the Master was, and told him of all the things that had befallen him. On this Buddha began the following discourse:—"Lust and passion (angry passion) are the constant miseries of the world. These are the causes of all the unhappiness which befalls the foolish man. These are the means by which the constant repetition of birth in the different conditions of existence (the five ways) is continued throughout the three worlds. If the sufferings of ages cannot bring men to repentance and amendment, how much less can we expect the fool now to become wise, and shake off the poison of this lust and covetous longing, which destroys his body and ruins his family (clan), nay, which destroys and ruins the whole world—and if this be so, how can we wonder at what has befallen this man and his wife. Then the master added these lines:

“The fool self-bound by his covetousness, seeks not to escape to that shore. Coveting wealth and lustful indulgence, he destroys others and he is self-destroyed. The lustful mind is the field, uxoriousness, anger, delusion, are the fruits. Therefore he who bestows charity on the non-worldly man, obtains by so doing boundless happiness (merit). Companions few and goods many,¹ the merchant, timorous and anxious, given to covetous thoughts, the robber takes his life (or, 'these, like a robber, take his life'). The wise man, therefore, puts away all covetous desire."

¹ This is a literal translation—I cannot render it otherwise.

The householder hearing these words was filled with joy; he forgot his grief, and rising from his seat, he and his associates at once obtained the fruition of the first path.

5. In days of old when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana Vihâra, near Śrâvastî, preaching his word for the sake of Devas and men, &c., there happened to be two wandering fellows who were sworn friends, and as it were one in heart, who being in the neighbourhood thought they would become Shamans. They came accordingly to the place where the master was, and after doing homage they explained their wish. Having admitted them to his community, he sent them to one place to give themselves up to meditation. Notwithstanding all their efforts, however, they were unable to forget the pleasures of their former life, and were enslaved by longing for sensual indulgence. Buddha by his divine sight understanding their condition, and desiring to save them, caused a Shaman to go to their place of abode, and addressing them said, "What think you if we three go to the neighbouring harlot-quarter, and without further ado, have a look at the form of one of the beauties about whom you think so much?" Accordingly they all went to the harlots' quarter, and meeting with one (who was indeed only Buddha himself so transformed), they asked her to let them behold her charms, without actually committing any overt-act of transgression. Accordingly the woman began to take off her wreaths and her jewels, and gradually stripping off her clothes, lo! such a ghastly sight of deformity met their eyes, and such a fetid odour assailed their sense, that they could not come nigh the place where she was. Then the Shaman turned and addressed the two: "What the world calls beauty is but the combination of flowers and ornaments; unguents and dress; remove these, and what is there but unsightliness and disgusting appearance? Is it with such a form as this, the skin wrinkled like leather, the body exuding foul smells, that you are so madly enamoured, and then he added these verses:

“O lust! I have discovered thy source and origin. Born of the busy recollections that haunt the mind. Now will I no more think of thee or these; then thou shalt not longer exist for me. Of the mind alone is lustful desire; from oneself arise the five longings of sense. Haste, then, to bind these five desires, and prove thyself a hero indeed! Where there is no lust there is no anxious fear; at rest, and quiet, there are no more harrowing cares for such an one—desire expelled, its trammels for ever cast away. This is indeed to find true deliverance (lit. “for long to come out of the gulf (of misery)”) [probably the same as “Oghattinna,” vide M.M. 370].

Then Buddha, having assumed his glorious appearance, the two Shamans were filled with shame, and with deep repentance fell down at his feet and did obeisance. And after listening further to his instruction they¹ became Rahats. Now as they were returning to their place of abode, the one seeing the happy, contented face of the other, asked his companion the reason of it, on which he repeated over and over the following lines:—

“Day and night was I a slave of lustful desires, incessantly did my mind dwell on these thoughts; but now I have seen the woman I longed for so

¹ Or, as the following lines would indicate, only one was able to arrive at this condition.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XXXIII.

ADVANTAGEOUS SERVICE.¹

FORMERLY Buddha with his followers, having gone to the kingdom of Kausâmbî (Ku-tan-mi), he took up his residence in the Vihâra called Mi-yin (lovely sound), and there preached the word for the sake of Devas and men. At this time the king of the country was called Yau-tien (Udâyana), whose queen was of a remarkably pure character. Having heard that Buddha had come to his kingdom, the King and the Queen, with her attendants, went forth to visit him, and having paid him the usual salutations, they sat down. Then Buddha, for their sakes, began to preach and to show the impermanency, sorrow, and vanity of things around us, from which all our miseries come. And then he proved that heaven was the reward of religious merit (virtue), and hell the result of sin (crime). In consequence of this sermon both the King and Queen were induced to accept the five rules of a lay-disciple, and so returned to the palace. Now at this time there was a certain Brahman called Kih-sing (lucky star), who had a daughter incomparable for loveliness, just sixteen years old. On her account the Brahman, for ninety days, exposed a heap of a thousand gold masurans, and challenged any one to find a single fault in her, and whoever could do so should have the gold. No one being able to do so, and desiring to find some one fit for her to marry, he again challenged any one to bring a man equal to his daughter in grace, and to him he would give her as a wife. Now, having heard that the family of the Shaman Gôtama, known as the Śâkyas, were remarkable for their beauty, and that therefore he was fit to possess his daughter, he came to the place where Buddha was, and taking his daughter with him, after the usual salutations, he spake thus:—"My daughter is extremely beautiful, and unequalled for womanly grace; and you also, Gôtama, are remarkable for your beauty. You may, therefore, have my daughter, and make her your companion (wife)." To whom Buddha replied, "Your daughter's beauty, sir, is according to your own estimation; my beauty is according to that of the Buddhas; my beauty and a woman's beauty are wholly different. Your daughter's loveliness, O sir, is like that of the picture on the jar (or vessel), in the middle of which there is only filth and excrement. How can that be considered as beauty which belongs only to the eyes, the ears, the nose, the mouth, the body? It is this beauty of outside form that causes sorrow, overturns families, destroys kinship, sacrifices relationships, kills children; all these come from this (love of) womanly beauty. But I am a Shaman—I stand by myself—and would rather endure any calamity than comply with your request. Sir, you may go; I decline your offer."

¹ This section, as I have already observed, does not occur in the Pâli.

On this the Brahman departed highly irate; and then, coming into the presence of the King, he dilated on his daughter's beauty, and offered her to him. The King, highly pleased at her appearance, accepted her, and made her his second Queen. Having laden her with presents and jewelry, she soon began to fill his mind with jealous thoughts and dislike for the first Queen, and at last persuaded him to send for her on a certain occasion to indulge her fancy (knowing that she would not come). Consequently the King sent for her, on which the first Queen declined to appear, on the ground that she was engaged in some religious exercise (fast), and so for several occasions. The King, enraged thereat, sent a man with a rope to drag her into his presence; and when she was brought in, he took his bow and purposed to shoot her through the body. But lo! the arrow he discharged returned again towards the King, and did her no harm; and so again and again. On this the King, filled with astonishment (fear), said to her, "By what power of magic have you been able to bring this about?" To which she replied, "I have but taken refuge in the three gems, and the whole day have been engaged in religious observances (fasts), and on this account the Lord (World-honoured) has protected me." On this the King exclaimed, "Wonderful!" and, dismissing the second Queen, he sent her back to her parents, and re-established the first in undisputed authority. Then, with the Queen's attendants, he went to the place where Buddha was, and after due salutations, he explained to him what had happened, on which Buddha (after a short discourse) repeated these lines:—

"If Heaven were to rain down the seven precious substances, yet would not the covetous man be satisfied; his pleasure would be little, his sorrow much. The wise man, possessed of virtue, although he possessed the pleasures of Heaven, would wisely let them go, and covet them not. He who finds his happiness in removing thoughts of lustful enjoyment, this man is the disciple of Buddha."

Then Buddha further explained to the King the inevitable result of a wicked life, that it would redound ten thousand times more miserably on the guilty man, whilst the reward of religion and self-denial would be certainly the enjoyment of heaven. Having so spoken, the King and the Queen's attendants, and the rest, received perfect release, and became partakers in the Paths.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

layman, and standing by the side of the Bhikshu, repeated these expostulatory stanzas :—

“O Shaman ! whither goest thou ? unguarded in the workings of thought. Step by step becoming more immersed in the slough, as you follow your evil purpose. Disgrace not your robes by such evil conduct as you purpose ! Death stares you in the face as you go forward ! Stem the stream (of inclination), pause and reflect, trample down the lustful desire. A man who does not destroy desire is led on by one thought alone (to do this and that, till he destroys and ruins himself). Be up then, and dare to do ! Bind thyself fast. The man who has left home (to become a Shaman), and yet gives way to idleness and sloth—whose mind still hankers after impure indulgence—is like the rotten tree against which the wind blows, which can hardly resist its force, but is soon blown down.”

Then Buddha, having assumed his glorious appearance, the Bhikshu, ashamed of his weakness, fell down at the master's feet, and, deeply repenting, soon became a Rahat ; and countless others who heard the circumstances, belonging to the Vihâra, received divine illumination.

SECTION XXXV.

THE BRAHMACHÂRIN.

IN days of old, in a certain mountain (called Sse-yau-chu-to) in the country of Saketa (Sse-ho-teh), there were resident some 500 Brahmans who pretended to have arrived at final release (Nirvâna), in consideration of their miraculous powers (irrdhi). Now at this time Buddha, having just arrived at complete enlightenment, and beginning to sound the drum of the law, and open the doors of immortality, was induced, on account of these Brahmachârin, to come into their neighbourhood, and sitting beneath a tree, to reveal the splendour of his person. After some conversation with them, he repeated these verses :

“Stem the stream and pass over, without desire as a Brahman ! Understanding the end of all that is made (or, of all modes of conduct), this is truly named (the life of a) Brahmachârin.¹ In (or, by means of) the two laws of nothingness,² pure and spotless passing over the gulf, casting off all the bonds of desire, this is to be a Brahmachârin (indeed). It is not by his clan, or his platted hair, that a man is called a Brahman, but he who walks truthfully and righteously, he is indeed rightly called a good man (Bhadra). What avails the platted hair, O fool! the garment of grass, what good? Within there is no quittance of desire, then what advantage the outward denial of self? Put away lust, hatred, delusion, sloth and all its evil consequences, as the snake puts off its skin, this is to be a Brahmachârin indeed. Separate yourself from all worldly associations—let the mouth speak no foul words—thoroughly investigate the eight paths (Ashtânga mârگا), this is to be a Brahmachârin indeed. To have cast off all thoughts of family affection, to have given up all desire after home, and all the bonds of personal preference loosed, this is to be a Brahmachârin indeed. He who has given up all thoughts about this world or the next, and places no reliance on either—this man is a Brahmachârin indeed. He who understands his own previous history, and has come to an end of all future chance of birth or death, him I call a Brahmachârin. He who is perfect in knowledge, is a Brahmachârin.”

¹ The reader will observe the similarity of the Pâli version, vers. 383, &c.

² The sense appears to be “regarding both this world and the other as nothing.” Compare the Pâli orapâra.

Having thus spoken, Buddha addressed the Brahmachârins in these words:

“You who profess to have arrived at Nirvâna, are but as fishes in a pool of shallow water! What pleasure or satisfaction can you expect?”

The Brahmachârins having heard these words and considered them, bowed down before Buddha, and having been admitted into his community, soon became Rahats. The other hearers, also filled with joy, were enabled to enter the Paths.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

the rules of reverence due to father and mother and other relations, and dutifully provide for their wants, so long, &c. (6.) So long as the Yue-chi religiously observe the ceremonies of the four seasons, in doing homage to heaven and earth, so long, &c. (7.) So long as the Yue-chi pay respect to all their religious teachers (Shamans), and especially those who have come to them from far (travellers or religious guests), and provide them with the usual necessities, such as food, bedding, medicine, &c., so long, &c.

These are the seven rules, if the Yue-chi observe only one of them, it would be difficult to overpower them, how much more if they regard the seven, and then the World-honoured added these words:—

“Rely not too entirely on the advantage of victory (conquest), for though you may prevail in battle, yet there is still sorrow in store; rather should a man seek the rules of self-conquest, having conquered himself, then there will be no further ground for birth (or, continued life).”

The minister having heard these words, was immediately convinced (obtained the rudiments of truth (wisdom or Bôdhi)), and those in the assembly who had not yet entered the Paths, were enabled to do so. The minister then rising from his seat, begged permission to depart, and on being so permitted by Buddha, he went back to the King and told him what the master had said. On this the King gave up all his intentions to go to war, and in consequence the Yue-chi returned to their obedience and submitted to the King.

SECTION XXXVII.

. BIRTH AND DEATH.

IN days of old when Buddha was residing in the Jetavana Vihâra, near Śrâvastî, preaching his law¹ for the sake of Devas and men, there was a certain rich householder, a Brahman, who had a son just twenty years old, who had recently married a wife. And now seven days had passed after the marriage, when the young pair agreed to go together to the after-garden to look at the beautiful trees and flowers. It was just the third month of spring-time when they sallied forth. Amongst the other trees there was one beautiful plum-tree in blossom, the flowers of which were beyond their reach, but yet the bride longed to have one. On this the young man assayed to climb the tree to get his love a flower. Having reached a top-most branch, lo! it gave way beneath his weight, and he fell to the ground and was killed. Then there was great lamentation among the members of his family. The wails and cries of his friends resounded on every side—and after returning from his funeral obsequies—which were conducted according to the rules of religion—the house was again filled with the sounds of grief and lamentation. On this the World-honoured, perceiving the circumstances of the case, came at once to the dwelling. On seeing him, the father and mother and all the rest went forth and did him reverence; and on explaining the cause of their grief the master addressed the householder and said, “Cease your lamentations, and listen to me! All things around you are inconstant and destined to change! Once born, then there is death. Sin and its consequences are necessarily bound up together. And who is this youth, and who his relations for whom ye weep so pitifully and without intermission?" And then the Master repeated these verses:—

¹ The expression used here for “law,” implies “the expanded law,” or “saddharma.”

“What is life but the flower or the fruit which falls, when ripe, but yet which ever fears the untimely frost? Once born there is nought but sorrow; for who is there can escape death? From the first moment of conception in the womb, the result of passionate love and desire, there is nought but the bodily form, transitory as the lightning flash. It is difficult to dam up the daily flow of the waters of life. The body is but a thing destined to perish. There is no certain form given to the spirit conceived with the body. Once dead it is again born—the connections of sin and of merit cannot be overreached. It is not a matter of one life, or one death, but from the act of renewed conception proceeds all the consequences of former deeds, resulting in joy or misery; the body dies but the spirit is not entombed!”

After these verses were said, Buddha explained that the cause of the untimely death of the young bridegroom was, that in former days he had ruthlessly shot a young sparrow through the body, as he wandered through the garden of his house with three companions; and then after explaining the consequences of this proceeding in each case the World-honoured added these verses:

“It is the mind alone (spirit) that determines

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

SECTION XXXVIII.

THE PROFIT OF RELIGION.

1. THERE was in former days a certain King who ruled his people justly, and with an earnest desire for their good; but he had no son to succeed him. Buddha, having come to his kingdom, he went to hear him preach, and being convinced of the truth he became a disciple. After this he ceased not to pray earnestly for a son. Now he had a little servant boy (keih-shi?) about eleven years old, who also devoted himself to religious exercises and the repetition of Scripture. This boy having died, was re-incarnated as a child of the King his master, and when he had arrived at the age of fifteen years he was publicly acknowledged as the Prince Royal (Kumâra). After a while, the King having died, the Prince ascended the throne, and he soon gave way to evil habits of self-indulgence, and the people and the kingdom suffered in consequence. On this Buddha, knowing all the circumstances of the case, once more visited the kingdom, and the Râja having gone to meet him, paid the usual obeisance. Buddha then began to explain to the King how it was he had come to his present royal dignity—viz., by his attention in former births to the five religious duties of a Shaman, which are these—1st, charity; 2d, founding religious buildings; 3d, reverence in worship; 4th, patience and self-restraint; 5th, diligent search after truth. By observing these he had attained his present rank; and then the World-honoured added these words, and said:—

“A man who knows how to reverence the higher powers, his parents, and religious teachers—who is full of faith, and obedience, and charity, and wisdom—shall certainly in the end attain a fortunate condition of birth. His destiny being thus a felicitous one, if born in the world he will be a ruler of men¹ (“prince,” or “honourable,” among men), and by his wisdom will be able to control the empire. Reverencing the law, it cannot be but that he will become lord of men. And so continuing in the path of virtue, and not receding therefrom, he will ever be so born, and without any intermission enjoy increasing happiness.”

Buddha having thus spoken, explained how the King had come to his present dignity, and urged him not to give way, now he had attained such a position, to the temptations of sense, and then added these lines:—

“The man who possesses authority in the world, practising himself in right dealing, and not using violence, regulating his thoughts, and overcoming all wicked desires, thus becomes a king of the law (or a righteous king). Seeing that which is right, he is able to do good; loving virtue, he is able to profit men; and thus, by an impartiality of conduct, he treats all and makes all, as it were, his own equals and fellows.”

The King having heard these words, was filled with penitence, and bowing down at Buddha's feet, he received the five rules of a lay disciple, and entered the first Path.

2. In days of old, when Buddha was residing at the Jetavana Vihâra, near Śrâvastî, preaching his law for the good

¹ Compare the Greek ἀναξ ἀνδρῶν (Juventus Mundi, cap. vi.).

of Devas and men, at this time there was in a country some way to the south a very large elephant of a three-fold colour, white, blue, and black, which the King very much desired to capture and to tame, so as to make it one of his fighting elephants. Accordingly having despatched his chief hunter for the purpose, he waited in expectation of his command being obeyed. Now there was at this time in the mountains a certain divine elephant, his body white as snow, his tail red as vermilion, and his tusks yellow as gold. Having seen this creature, the hunter returned to the King, and asked him whether the elephant he had been sent to capture was of this kind. The King immediately ordered the beast to be taken and brought to him. On this the hunter, with thirty men, went in pursuit of him. Having come to the spot, and surrounded the place, the elephant, knowing their purpose, allowed the men to approach him, and then, filled with fury, he rushed at them and trampled the nearest to death, and put the others to flight. Now at this time in the side of the mountain there was a young and lusty hermit, who had long practised his religious austerities without arriving at any degree of fixedness. Seeing from a distance the sad case of these hunters, and pitying their condition, relying on his strength, he hurried to the spot, hoping to save them. Meantime Buddha, seeing the danger of this Bhikshu, and fearing lest the divine elephant should kill him, quickly transported himself to the place, and standing beside the elephant, caused the glory of his person to exhibit itself. The elephant, seeing the brilliancy of the body of Buddha, appeased his rage, and gave up the pursuit of the men. The Bhikshu also seeing the wonderful light that shone forth, bowed down at Buddha's feet, who forthwith repeated these verses:—

“Be not so foolishly angry with the divine elephant as thus to entangle yourself in the certain calamity that will follow your conduct; the evil

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

SECTION XXXIX.

GOOD FORTUNE (MAHÁMANGALA).¹

WHEN Buddha was residing in the Gridhrakûta Mountain, near Râjagriha, preaching for the benefit of Devas and men, there was residing on the banks of the Ganges a certain Brahmachârin, belonging to the Nirgrantha sect, of considerable age and vast wisdom. This man, with his 500 followers, devoted himself to the study of the stars and heavenly bodies, with a view to predict lucky and unlucky events. On one occasion, just before Buddha had commenced his public ministry, this man, with his disciples, were discussing the question of “good fortune,” as they sat by the river’s side; and after explaining in what good fortune consisted, so far as it concerned the happiness of a prince in his worldly empire, the question arose as to what “good fortune” was when considered in reference to the future. After much discussion, they resolved to go to the Bôdhi Tree, where the World-honoured had just overcome Mâra, and put this question to him, What is the secret of real “good fortune”? On which the Master opened his mouth and repeated these lines:—

“Buddha, the Honoured above all gods, Tathâgata, the ever-wise and intelligent, is asked by the learned sages of the Brahmachârin sect in what consists the enjoyment of good fortune. On this Buddha, the compassionate, for their sake enunciates true wisdom. He who has faith, and delights in the true Law, this man is fortunate above all others. He who looks for good luck neither from gods or sacrifices to spirits (but from himself) is truly fortunate. A friend of the virtuous, and holding with the righteous, always making the consideration of virtue his first aim, keeping his body in strict obedience to the rules of propriety, this man is fortunate indeed! Avoiding bad people and following the good, giving up wine, and using strict moderation in all personal gratification, not lusting after female beauty, this man is indeed a fortunate one. Ever anxious to listen to the rules of right conduct, persevering in the study of the Law and Rules of Discipline (Dharma and Vinaya), self-restrained and without offence, this man is fortunate above all. If a householder, then caring for his father and mother, and looking after the welfare of his house, and properly fostering his wife and child, not occupying himself in vain and useless avocations, this man is indeed fortunate. Not giving way to idleness or self-honour, knowing the character of moderation (as to himself), and thoughtful of his friends, at proper times reading the Scriptures and practising (himself in them), this man is truly fortunate. Patiently continuing in the way of duty (of what he hears he ought to do), rejoicing to see a religious person (Shaman), and ever inviting such an one to instruct him in religion, this man is happy. Observing the religious seasons (fasts), and during such seasons using strict self-abstinence, always desiring to see the virtuous and holy man, placing his confidence in the instruction of the enlightened, this man is fortunate. Once convinced of the happiness of religion (Bôdhi), then with upright heart never swerving from his faith, desiring above all things to escape the three evil ways (of birth), this man is truly happy. With equal mind, devoting himself to charity, honouring all the wise alike, and paying respect to the Divine Spirits, this man is indeed happy. Always anxious to get rid of sensual desires and covetousness, to escape from delusive thoughts, ignorance, and anger, ever constant in the pursuit of true wisdom, this man is indeed fortunate. Even in discarding the evil using no extraordinary appearance of effort, but steadily persevering in the practice of what is right, always acting as he ought to act, this man is fortunate indeed. Full of love for all things in the world, practising virtue in order to benefit others, this man alone is happy. The wise man dwelling in the world, pursuing this line of fortunate behaviour with constancy, ever pressing onwards to complete what knowledge he has gained, this is a happy man indeed."

¹ This section agrees with the “Mahámangala Sutta” of the Sutta Nipâta.

The Brahmachârin, having heard the instruction of Buddha, felt his heart full of joy; immediately he arose and worshipped, and took refuge in Buddha, the Law, and the Church.

The Nirgrantha and his followers, having heard these words, were very glad, and after due worship they obtained permission to become Shamans, and soon obtained inward illumination (the eyes of the Law).

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

SAVE $3,999,994

Did you know we sell
paperback books too?

To buy our entire catalog
in paperback would cost
over $4,000,000

Access it all now for
$8.99/month

*Fair usage policy applies

Continue

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

Do not remove the card from this Pocket.

Acme Library Card Pocket
Under Pat. "Ref. Index File."
Made by LIBRARY BUREAU

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS

Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies