

Mythology Photography Fiction Fishing
Christianity Art Cooking Essays
Buddhism Freemasonry Medicine Biology
Music Ancient Egypt Evolution
Carpentry Physics Dance Geology
Metaphysics Fitness Shakespeare
Finance Yoga Marketing Confidence
Immortality Biographies Poetry
Psychology Witchcraft Electronics
Chemistry History Law Accounting
Philosophy Anthropology Alchemy Drama
Quantum Mechanics Atheism Sexuality
Mental Health Ancient History Crime
Entrepreneurship Languages Sport
Paleontology Networks Technology
Metaphysics Investment Archaeology

Forgotten Books

— www.forgottenbooks.com —

Copyright © 2016 FB &c Ltd.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, distributed, or transmitted in any form or by any means, including photocopying, recording, or other electronic or mechanical methods, without the prior written permission of the publisher, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical reviews and certain other noncommercial uses permitted by copyright law.

THE HARVARD ORIENTAL SERIES

VOLUME THIRTY

THE HARVARD ORIENTAL SERIES

VOLUME THIRTY

HARVARD ORIENTAL SERIES

EDITED

WITH THE COÖPERATION OF VARIOUS SCHOLARS

BY

CHARLES ROCKWELL LANMAN

Professor at Harvard University; Honorary Fellow of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, of France, of England, and of Germany; Corresponding Member of the Society of Sciences at Göttingen, the Russian Academy of Sciences, and the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres of the Institute of France

Volume Thirty

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

Harvard University Press

1921

BUDDHIST LEGENDS

Translated from the original Pāli text of the

DHAMMAPADA^{ṭhākaṭhā} COMMENTARY

BY

EUGENE WATSON BURLINGAME

Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; sometime Harrison Fellow for Research, University of Pennsylvania, and Johnston Scholar in Sanskrit, Johns Hopkins University; Lecturer on Pāli (1917–1918) in Yale University

PART 3: TRANSLATION OF BOOKS 18 TO 26

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

Harvard University Press

1921

Volumes 28 and 29 and 30, first issue : 1000 copies each
Copyright, 1921, by the Harvard University Press

Direct. (cont.)
1-24-1923

Composed on the monotype, and printed from electrotpe plates, by
The University Press : John Wilson & Son, Incorporated, Cambridge, Massachusetts, U.S.A.

BOOK XIII. THE WORLD, LOKA VAGGA

XIII. 1. A YOUNG GIRL JESTS WITH A YOUNG MONK¹

One should not follow a life of evil. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain young monk. [161]

The story goes that one day, early in the morning, a certain Elder went with a young monk to the house of Visākhā. Now in the house of Visākhā there was continual distribution of cakes and rice-gruel. The Elder, having drunk rice-gruel there, provided a seat for the young monk, and himself went on to another house. Now at that time the daughter of Visākhā's son was acting for her grandmother in ministering to the needs of the monks. As she was straining water for the young monk, seeing the reflection of her own face in the water-vessel, she laughed; the young monk looked at it and also laughed.

Seeing him laughing, she said, "A cut-head is laughing." At that the young monk abused her, saying, "You are a cut-head, and your mother and father are cut-heads too." At this she ran weeping into her grandmother's kitchen. "What is the matter, dear granddaughter?" She told her grandmother the whole story. Visākhā immediately went to the young monk and said to him, "Reverend Sir, be not offended. You misunderstand that remark. [162] It is an expression of profound respect for a noble monk with hair and nails cut close, who, as he goes his round for alms, holds in the folds of under and upper garments cut short a potsherd cut and broken." The young monk replied, "Quite true, lay disciple; you understand that it is in accordance with my rule that the hair of my head and so forth are cut short. But was it proper for this girl to insult me by saying to me, 'You are a cut-head'?" Visākhā was unable to quiet either the young monk or the young girl.

At that moment the Elder approached and asked, "What does this mean, lay disciple?" Having learned the facts, the Elder admonished the young monk as follows, "Begone, brother; that is no insult to a monk with hair and nails and robes cut short, who goes his round for alms with potsherd cut and broken. Hold your peace.” “Quite true, Reverend Sir; but why, instead of rebuking your own female lay disciple, do you rebuke me? Is it to be regarded as the proper thing to insult a monk by saying to him, ‘You are a cut-head’?” At that moment the Teacher approached. “What does this mean?” he asked. Visākhā told him the whole story, beginning at the beginning.

¹ Text: N iii. 161-163.

The Teacher, perceiving that the young monk possessed the faculties requisite to attain the Fruit of Conversion, thought to himself, “I must follow up this young monk.” Therefore he said to Visākhā, “But, Visākhā, is it proper for your granddaughter, merely because my disciples go about with hair and so forth cut short, on that account to insult them by calling them cut-heads?” The young monk immediately sprang to his feet, and extending his clasped hands in an attitude of reverent supplication, said, “Reverend Sir, you alone correctly understand this matter; neither our preceptor nor our eminent female lay disciple understands it correctly.” The Teacher, perceiving that the young monk was in harmony with himself, said, “An attitude of ridicule with reference to the pleasures of sense is a low attitude, and an attitude that is low one ought never to take, nor should one dwell together with heedlessness.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [163]

167. One should not follow a life of evil, one should not dwell together with heedlessness,

One should not follow false views, one should not look with high regard upon the world.

XIII. 2. THE BUDDHA VISITS KAPILA ¹

A man should exert himself. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Banyan Grove with reference to his own father.

For at a certain time the Teacher made his first journey to the city Kapila, and when he arrived there, his kinsmen came forth to meet him and to greet him. On that occasion, in order to break the overweening pride of his kinsfolk, he created by supernatural power a cloister of jewels in mid-air, and in this cloister walked up and down preaching the Law. The hearts of his kinsfolk were straightway endowed with faith, and beginning with the great king Suddhodana, all did reverence to him. Thereupon there fell upon the assemblage of his kinsfolk a shower of rain, with reference to which there arose a discussion among the multitude. Said the Teacher, "Monks, this is not the first time a shower of rain has fallen upon an assemblage of my kinsfolk; the same thing happened in a previous state of existence also." [164] So saying, he related the Vessantara Jātaka.¹ Having heard him preach the Law, his kinsfolk departed, not even one extending an invitation to the Teacher. Likewise the king, although the thought occurred to him, "If my son does not come to my house, where will he go?" went home without inviting him. When he reached the royal residence, however, he caused rice-gruel and other kinds of food to be prepared for twenty thousand monks, and likewise seats to be provided for them.

¹ Cf. i. 9 a. Text: N iii. 163–165.

On the following day, as the Teacher entered the city to receive alms, he considered within himself, "Did the Buddhas of the past, upon entering the city of their father, straightway enter the house of their kinsfolk, or did they go from house to house in regular order receiving alms?" Perceiving that they always went from house to house, the Teacher likewise began at the first house and went from house to house receiving alms. They brought word of this to the king. The king went quickly out of his residence, adjusting his cloak as he went, and prostrating himself before the Teacher, said, "Son, why do you mortify me? I am overwhelmed with shame to see you going from house to house receiving alms. In this very city it would be improper for you to go from house to house in a golden litter receiving alms. Why do you put me to shame?" "Great king, I am not putting you to shame; I am merely keeping up the tradition of my lineage." "But, my dear son, is it a tradition of my lineage to gain a livelihood by going from house to house receiving alms?" "No, great king, that is not a tradition of your lineage. But it is a tradition of my lineage, for countless thousands of Buddhas have gone from house to house receiving alms, and have so gained their sustenance." So saying, he preached the Law by pronouncing the following Stanzas, 168. A man should exert himself, and should not live the life of Heedlessness.

A man should live righteously; for by living righteously

A man rests happily, both in this world and in the next.

169. A man should live righteously, not unrighteously;

For by living righteously a man rests happily, both in this world and in the next.

¹ Jātaka 547: vi. 479-593.

At the conclusion of the lesson the king was established in the Fruit of Conversion; the assembled company also profited by the lesson.

XIII. 3. FIVE HUNDRED MONKS ATTAIN INSIGHT¹

As a bubble. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to five hundred monks who obtained Insight. [165]

It appears that five hundred monks obtained a Subject of Meditation from the Teacher, retired to the forest, and devoted themselves to meditation. But although they strove and struggled with might and main, they were unable to develop Specific Attainment. Thereupon they thought to themselves, "We will obtain a Subject of Meditation better suited to our needs." With this thought in mind, they set out to return to the Teacher. On the way they saw a mirage. Concentrating their attention on the mirage, they developed Specific Attainment. [166] The moment they entered the precincts of the monastery, it began to rain. Standing here and there on the terraces, they watched the bubbles formed by the force of the downpour, rising and bursting. Thereupon the following thought occurred to them, "Even as a bubble, so also does this personality of ours rise and burst." Immediately they concentrated their attention on this thought. The Teacher, sitting in the Perfumed Chamber, sent forth a luminous image of himself, and as it were looking into the faces of those monks, spoke with them, pronouncing the following Stanza,

170. As a bubble, as a mirage, so should one view the world;
If a man so look upon the world, the King of Death sees him not.

At the conclusion of the lesson those monks, even in the place wherein they stood, attained Arahatsip.

XIII. 4. PRINCE ABHAYA LOSES HIS NAUTCH-GIRL²

Come, look upon this world. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Prince Abhaya.

¹ Cf. story iv. 2. Text: N iii. 165-166.

² Cf. the similar story of Santati, x. 9. Text: N iii. 166-167.

The story goes that Prince Abhaya suppressed an uprising on the frontier, which so pleased his father Bimbisāra that when the prince returned, the King gave him a nautch-girl skilled in dancing and singing, [167] and conferred the kingdom on him for seven days. Accordingly for seven days the prince did not leave the house, but remained within enjoying the splendor of majesty. On the eighth day he went to the bathing-place on the river and bathed. Having so done, he entered his pleasure garden, sat down, like Santati the king's minister, and watched that nautch-girl dance and sing. As soon, however, as that nautch-girl began to dance and sing, at that moment, just as in the case of the nautch-girl belonging to Santati the king's minister, cutting pains arose within her, and then and there she died.

Prince Abhaya was overwhelmed with sorrow at the death of his nautch-girl. Immediately the thought came to him, "With the single exception of the Teacher, there is no one who can extinguish this my sorrow." So he approached the Teacher and said to him, "Reverend Sir, extinguish my sorrow." The Teacher comforted him by saying, "Prince, in the round of existences without conceivable beginning, there is no counting the number of times this nautch-girl has died in this manner, and no measuring the tears you have shed as you have wept over her." Observing that the prince's grief was assuaged by the lesson, he said, "Prince, do not grieve; only simple-minded folk allow themselves to sink in the sea of grief." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

171. Come, look upon this world; it resembles the gaudy chariot of a king;
In it simpletons sink down, but the discerning cherish no attachment for it.

XIII. 5. THE MONK WITH A BROOM¹

He who, heedless before. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Sammuñjani. [168]

Elder Sammuñjani, it appears, went about sweeping continually, both in the morning and in the afternoon, taking no account whatever of the time. One day he took his broom, went to the cell where Elder Revata spent the day, and found him sitting there as usual. Thereupon he thought to himself, "This great idler enjoys the pious offerings of the faithful, and then returns and sits in his cell. Why should he not take a broom and sweep at least one room?" Elder Revata thought to himself, "I will give him an admonition." So he said to him, "Come here, brother." "What is it, Reverend Sir?" "Go and bathe and then return to me." Elder Sammuñjani did so.

¹ Text: N iii. 168-169.

On his return he seated himself respectfully beside Elder Revata, who thereupon admonished him as follows, "Brother, a monk ought not to go about sweeping all the time. Early in the morning he should of course sweep the rooms, and then he should go forth for alms. Returning from his alms-pilgrimage, he should enter the monastery, seat himself either in the night-quarters or in the day-quarters, and rehearse the Thirty-two Constituent Parts of the Body, grasping firmly the thought of the perishableness of the body. In the evening he should rise from his seat and sweep the rooms again. But he should not spend the whole day sweeping; rather should he allow himself a certain amount of leisure." Elder Sammuñjani adhered scrupulously to the admonition of Elder Revata, and in no long time attained Arahatsip.

After that, however, all the rooms remained full of rubbish. Therefore the monks said to Elder Sammuñjani, "Brother, all the rooms remain full of rubbish; why do you not sweep them?" "Reverend Sirs, I used to do that in the days when I was heedless; now, however, I have become heedful." The monks reported the matter to the Teacher, saying, "This Elder does one thing and says another." But the Teacher replied, "Monks, my son the Elder spoke the truth; formerly, in the days of his heedlessness, my son spent the whole time sweeping, but now he spends his time in the enjoyment of the bliss of the Paths and the Fruits, and therefore sweeps no more." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [169]

172. He who, heedless before, heedless is no more,
Illumines this world as does the moon freed from a cloud.

XIII. 6. CONVERSION OF THE ROBBER FINGER-GARLAND¹

He whose past misdeeds. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Finger-Garland, Aṅgulimāla.

¹ Majjhima, 86: ii. 97-103. Cf. Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 257-261; and Chavannes, Cinq cents Contes et Apologues, 41: i. 143-154.

Thus have I heard: Once upon a time the Exalted One was in residence in Sāvatthi, at Jetavana, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Grove. Now at that time there lived in the realm of King Pasenadi Kosala a robber named Finger-Garland, Aṅgulimāla. He was cruel, red-handed, given to killing and slaying, devoid of compassion for all living beings. He wrought such havoc with villages that villages they were no more, [M. ii. 98] such havoc with towns that towns they were no more, such havoc with districts, that districts they were no more. He killed man after man, and wore a garland made of their fingers.

Now one morning the Exalted One put on his undergarment, took bowl and robe, and entered Sāvatthi for alms. Having made his round for alms in Sāvatthi, he returned from his round; and after eating his breakfast, put his lodgings in order, took bowl and robe, and struck into the highway where lurked the robber Aṅgulimāla. Cowherds, herdsmen, and farmers ran up and saw the Exalted One strike into the highway where lurked the robber Aṅgulimāla, and seeing him, addressed the Exalted One as follows:

“Monk, strike not into this road. On this road, monk, lurks a robber named Aṅgulimāla. He is cruel, red-handed, given to killing and slaying, devoid of compassion for all living beings. He has wrought such havoc with villages that villages they are no more, such havoc with towns that towns they are no more, such havoc with districts that districts they are no more. He kills man after man and wears a garland made of their fingers. For, monk, many a time ten men, or twenty men, or thirty men, or forty men band themselves together and strike into this road, and all of them perish at the hands of the robber Aṅgulimāla.” In spite of their warning the Exalted One continued on his way in silence.

Again the second time cowherds, herdsmen, and farmers ran up and addressed the Exalted One as follows: “Monk, strike not into this road . . . and all of them perish at the hands of the robber Aṅgulimāla.” The Exalted One a second time continued on his way in silence.

Again, the third time cowherds, herdsmen, and farmers ran up and addressed the Exalted One as follows: “Monk, strike not into this road . . . and all of them perish at the hands of the robber Aṅgulimāla.” The Exalted One a third time continued on his way in silence.

Now the robber Aṅgulimāla saw the Exalted One approaching from afar. When he saw him, the following thought occurred to him: "How wonderful! How marvelous! For many a time ten men, or twenty men, or thirty men, or forty men band themselves together [M. ii. 99] and strike into this road, and all of them perish at my hands. But here is a monk approaching alone, without a single companion, as if he had conquered, methinks. Suppose now I were to deprive this monk of life!" So the robber Aṅgulimāla took sword and shield, girded himself with bow and quiver, and followed close behind the Exalted One.

Then did the Exalted One effect such an exercise of supernatural power that although the robber Aṅgulimāla hurried with all his might, and the Exalted One walked at his usual gait, the robber Aṅgulimāla was unable to catch up with the Exalted One. Then to the robber Aṅgulimāla occurred the following thought: "How wonderful! how marvelous! Heretofore I have overtaken and caught an elephant, even when running; I have overtaken and caught a horse, even when running; I have overtaken and caught a chariot, even when running; I have overtaken and caught a deer, even when running. But although I am hurrying with all my might and this monk is walking at his usual gait, I am unable to catch up with him." Accordingly Aṅgulimāla stood still and said to the Exalted One, "Stand still, monk! stand still, monk!" "I stand still, Aṅgulimāla. Do you also stand still!"

Then to the robber Aṅgulimāla occurred the following thought: "These hermits of the Sākiya prince speak the truth, utter the truth. But this monk says, even in the act of walking, 'I stand still, Aṅgulimāla. Do you also stand still!' Suppose now I were to ask this monk a question!" Accordingly the robber Aṅgulimāla addressed the Exalted One with a Stanza,

Even as you walk, monk, you say, "I stand still,"
And to me who stand still you say, "You stand not still."
Therefore, monk, I ask you this question:
"How stand you still, and I stand not still?"

I stand steadfast, Aṅgulimāla, evermore;
For I am merciful to all living beings.
But you are merciless to living beings.
Therefore I stand still and you stand not still. [M. ii. 100]

Long have I revered the monk, the mighty sage, who has entered the great forest.
Therefore, having heard your Stanza on the Law, I will renounce evil deeds forever.

So saying, the robber flung sword and weapon over the abyss, down the precipice, into the chasm.

The robber bowed before the feet of the Happy One, and then and there requested to be admitted to the Order.

Compassionate is the Buddha, the mighty sage who is the Teacher of the world of men and the Worlds of the Gods.

“Come, monk!” straightway said he to the robber; and this alone sufficed to make him a monk.

Now the Exalted One set out on a journey to Sāvatti with the Venerable Aṅgulimāla as attendant monk, and after journeying from place to place, arrived in due course at Sāvatti. And there did the Exalted One take up his residence, in Sāvatti, at Jetavana, in Anāthapiṇḍika’s Grove. Now at that time a great multitude assembled at the gate of the palace of King Pasenadi Kosala and raised a hue and cry: “Your majesty, there is a robber in your kingdom, named Aṅgulimāla. He is bloodthirsty, red-handed, given to killing and slaying, devoid of compassion for all living beings. He has wrought such havoc with villages that villages they are no more, such havoc with towns that towns they are no more, such havoc with districts that districts they are no more. He kills man after man, and wears a garland made of their fingers. Let your majesty subdue him.”

Then did King Pasenadi Kosala set out from Sāvatti early in the day with five hundred horses and proceed in the direction of the Grove. Proceeding in his carriage as far as the road was passable for a carriage, he alighted from his carriage, and proceeding on foot, drew near to the place where the Exalted One was. And having drawn near, [M. ii. 101] he saluted the Exalted One and sat down respectfully on one side. And as King Pasenadi Kosala sat there respectfully on one side, the Exalted One addressed him as follows: “What is it that troubles you, mighty king? Is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha provoked at you? Or the Licchavi princes of Vesāli? Or some other of your royal adversaries?”

“No, Reverend Sir, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha is not provoked at me. Nor the Licchavi princes of Vesāli. Nor any other of my royal adversaries. Reverend Sir, there is a robber named Aṅgulimāla in my kingdom. He is bloodthirsty, red-handed, given to killing and slaying, devoid of compassion for all living beings. He has wrought such havoc with villages that villages they are no more, such havoc with towns that towns they are no more, such havoc with districts that districts they are no more. He kills man after man, and wears a garland made of their fingers. And, Reverend Sir, I cannot subdue him.”

“But, mighty king, suppose you were to see Aṅgulimāla with his hair and his beard shaven, clad in yellow robes, retired from the house-life to the houseless life, abstaining from the taking of life, abstaining from the taking of that which is not given, abstaining from the uttering of falsehood, eating but one meal a day, living the life of chastity, living the life of virtue, living the life of righteousness; what then should you do to him?"

"Reverend Sir, we should salute him, we should rise to greet him, we should invite him to occupy a seat, we should ask for the privilege of supplying him with robes, food, lodging, and medicine. We should provide protection, defense, and keeping for him according to the Law. But, Reverend Sir, how is it possible that one so wicked, one so utterly devoted to evil ways, should become so perfectly restrained by the precepts of morality?"

Now at that time the Venerable Aṅgulimāla was sitting not far from the Exalted One. Then did the Exalted One stretch forth his right arm and address King Pasenadi Kosala as follows: "This, mighty king, is Aṅgulimāla!"

Then was King Pasenadi Kosala stricken with fear, his limbs trembled, and his hair stood on end. Now when the Exalted One perceived that King Pasenadi Kosala was stricken with fear, that his limbs trembled, and that his hair stood on end, he addressed King Pasenadi Kosala as follows: "Fear not, great king; fear not, great king; you have nothing to fear from him." Thereupon, whereas before King Pasenadi had been stricken with fear, [M. ii. 102] his limbs trembled, and his hair stood on end, straightway his agitation subsided. Then did King Pasenadi Kosala draw near to the place where sat Venerable Aṅgulimāla, and having drawn near, addressed the Venerable Aṅgulimāla as follows: "Reverend Sir, is not this our noble Elder Aṅgulimāla?" "Even so, mighty king." "Of what clan, Reverend Sir, is our noble Elder's father? Of what clan is his mother?" "My father, mighty king, is a Gagga; my mother is a Mantāṇī."

"Reverend Sir, may it please my noble Elder Gagga, son of Mantāṇī: I shall exert myself to the utmost to provide for my noble Elder Gagga, son of Mantāṇī, robes, food, lodging, and medicine." Now at that time the Venerable Aṅgulimāla had adopted the practices known as the forest-practice, the alms-practice, the refuse-rag-practice, and the three-robe-practice. Accordingly the Venerable Aṅgulimāla answered King Pasenadi Kosala as follows: "Enough, mighty king! My set of three robes is complete."

Then did King Pasenadi Kosala draw near to the place where sat

the Exalted One, and having drawn near, he saluted the Exalted One and sat down respectfully on one side. And sitting thus on one side, King Pasenadi Kosala addressed the Exalted One as follows: "It is wonderful, Reverend Sir! it is marvelous, Reverend Sir! how the Exalted One is the subduer of the unsubdued, the calmer of the uncalmed, the extinguisher of the unextinguished! For, Reverend Sir, the Exalted One has subdued even without the rod, even without the sword, him whom we ourselves were unable to subdue even with the rod, even with the sword! But now, Reverend Sir, we must be going, for we have many things to do, many things to attend to." "As you please, mighty king!" Then did King Pasenadi Kosala rise from his seat, salute the Exalted One, encircle him sunwise, and depart.

Now one morning the Venerable Aṅgulimāla put on his undergarment, took bowl and robe, and entered Sāvatti for alms. And as the Venerable Aṅgulimāla made his unbroken round of Sāvatti from house to house, he saw a certain woman in the throes and agonies of childbirth. When he saw her, [M. ii. 103] the following thought occurred to him: "Alas, how living beings suffer! Alas, how living beings suffer!"

Now when the Venerable Aṅgulimāla had made his round for alms in Sāvatti, he returned from his round, and after eating his breakfast, drew near to the place where sat the Exalted One. And having drawn near, he saluted the Exalted One and sat down respectfully on one side. Now as the Venerable Aṅgulimāla sat respectfully on one side, he addressed the Exalted One as follows: "This very morning, Reverend Sir, I put on my undergarment, took bowl and robe, and entered Sāvatti for alms. And as I made my unbroken round of Sāvatti from house to house, I saw a certain woman in the throes and agonies of childbirth. And when I saw her, the following thought occurred to me: 'Alas, how living beings suffer! Alas, how living beings suffer!'"

"Well then, Aṅgulimāla, draw near to Sāvatti, and having drawn near, address that woman as follows: 'Sister, from the day I was born, I am not conscious of having deliberately deprived any living being of life. If this be true, may health be to you, health to your unborn child.'" "But, Reverend Sir, that would be a deliberate falsehood; for, Reverend Sir, I have deliberately deprived a great many living beings of life." "Well then, Aṅgulimāla, draw near to Sāvatti, and having drawn near, address that woman as follows:

‘Sister, from the day I was born of the Noble Birth, I am not conscious of having deliberately deprived any living being of life. If this be true, may health be to you, health to your unborn child.’”

“Very well,” replied the Venerable Aṅgulimāla. And obeying the command of the Exalted One, the Venerable Aṅgulimāla drew near to Sāvatti, and having drawn near, addressed that woman as follows: “Sister, from the day I was born of the Noble Birth, I am not conscious of having deliberately deprived any living being of life. If this be true, may health be to you, health to your unborn child.” Straightway there was health to that woman, health to her unborn child.¹

Now the Venerable Aṅgulimāla, living in solitude, withdrawn from the world, heedful, ardent, resolute, in no long time, even in this life, himself abode in the knowledge, realization, and attainment of that supreme goal of the holy life for the sake of which goodly youths retire once and for all from the house-life to the houseless life. This did he know: “Birth is at an end, lived is the holy life, duty is done: I am no more for this world.” [M. ii. 104] Thus was the Venerable Aṅgulimāla numbered among the Arahats.

Now one morning the Venerable Aṅgulimāla put on his undergarment, took bowl and robe, and entered Sāvatti for alms. At that time one man threw a clod of earth and hit the Venerable Aṅgulimāla’s body, another man threw a stick and hit the Venerable Aṅgulimāla’s body, another man threw a stone and hit the Venerable Aṅgulimāla’s body. Then did the Venerable Aṅgulimāla, with broken head, streaming with blood, with broken bowl, with mantle rent, draw near to the place where sat the Exalted One. The Exalted One saw the Venerable Aṅgulimāla approaching from afar; and seeing him, addressed the Venerable Aṅgulimāla as follows: “Endure, Brahman! Endure, Brahman! Brahman, you are suffering in this present world the fruit of evil deeds, in consequence of which you might have been tormented in Hell for many years, for many hundreds of years, for many thousands of years!”

Now the Venerable Aṅgulimāla, living in solitude, living in seclusion, experiencing the Bliss of Release, breathed forth at that time the following Solemn Utterances:

¹ Cf. Dhammapada Commentary, xxvi. 31: iv. 192–194; Jātaka 100: i. 407–408; and Udāna, ii. 8: 15–18. For a discussion of this charm, see my paper, The Act of Truth (Saccakiriya); a Hindu Spell and its Employment as a Psychic Motif in Hindu Fiction, JRAS., 1917, 429–467. For other occurrences of the charm, see vi. 4 b and xvii. 3 b.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to 797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

[Dh. cm. iii. 169^{re}] When the Venerable Aṅgulimāla had breathed forth these Solemn Utterances, he straightway passed into that mode of Nibbāna in which no trace of the elements of being remain. Thereupon the monks began a discussion in the Hall of Truth, saying, “Brethren, where has the Elder been reborn?” At that moment the Teacher drew near. “Monks,” said he, “what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?” [170] “Reverend Sir,” replied the monks, “we were discussing the place of rebirth of the Elder Aṅgulimalā.” “Monks,” said the Teacher, “my son has passed into Nibbāna.” “What, Reverend Sir! Passed into Nibbāna after murdering all those men!” “Yes, monks. In times past, because he lacked a good counselor, he committed all these evil deeds. But afterwards, when he obtained the support of a good counselor, he adopted the life of heedfulness. Even thus did he cover his past misdeeds with good deeds.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

173. He whose past misdeeds are covered by good deeds,
Illumines this world as does the moon freed from a cloud.

XIII. 7. THE WEAVER'S DAUGHTER ¹

Blind is this world. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Aggālava Shrine with reference to a certain weaver's daughter.

For one day, when the Teacher came to Ālavi, the residents of Ālavi invited him to a meal and gave alms. At the end of the meal the Teacher returned thanks, saying, “Practice meditation on death, saying to yourselves, ‘Uncertain is my life. Certain is my death. I shall surely die. Death will be the termination of my life. Life is unstable. Death is sure.’” [171] For they that have not practiced meditation on death will tremble and fear when their last hour cometh, and will die screaming screams of terror, even as a man who having no stick with him, on seeing a snake, is stricken with fear. But they that have practiced meditation on death will have no fear when their last hour cometh, but will be like a steadfast man who, seeing a snake even afar off, taketh it up with his stick and tosseth it away. Therefore practice meditation on death.”

¹ This story is referred to at Milindapañha, 350¹³. Text: N iii. 170–176.

With a single exception all those who heard this discourse remained absorbed in their worldly duties as before. Only a single weaver's daughter about sixteen years of age, said to herself, "Marvelous indeed is the speech of the Buddhas; it behooves me to practice meditation on death." And she did naught else but practice meditation on death day and night. The Teacher left Ālavi and went to Jetavana. The maiden did naught else for three years but practice meditation on death.

Now one day, as the Teacher surveyed the world at early dawn, he perceived that this maiden had entered the Net of his Knowledge. When he saw her, he considered within himself, "What will happen?" And he became aware of the following, "From the day when this maiden heard my discourse on the Law, she has practiced meditation on death for three years. I will now go to Ālavi and ask this maiden four questions. On each of the four points she will answer me correctly, and I will congratulate her. I will then pronounce the Stanza, Blind is this world. At the conclusion of the Stanza she will be established in the Fruit of Conversion. By reason of her, my discourse will be profitable to the multitude besides." So the Teacher, with his retinue of five hundred monks, departed from Jetavana, and in due course arrived at Aggālava monastery.

When the people of Ālavi heard that the Teacher had come, they went to the monastery and invited him to be their guest. That maiden also heard that he had come, and her heart was filled with joy at the thought, "Hither is come, so men say, one that is my father, my master, my teacher, one whose countenance is like unto the full moon, the mighty Gotama Buddha." And she reflected, "Now, for the first time in three years, I am to see the Teacher, the hue of whose body is as the hue of gold; [172] now I am to be permitted to behold his body, whose hue is as the hue of gold, and to hear him preach the Law Sublime, containing within itself all sweetness."

But her father, on his way to the workshop, said to her, "Daughter, a garment for a customer is on the loom, and a span of it is yet incomplete. I must finish it to-day. Quickly replenish the shuttle and bring it to me." Thought the maiden, "It was my desire to hear the Teacher preach the Law, but my father has thus addressed me. Shall I hear the Teacher preach the Law, or replenish the shuttle and carry it to my father?" Then this thought occurred to her, "If I should fail to bring my father the shuttle, he would strike me and beat me. Therefore I will first replenish the shuttle and give it to him, and wait until afterwards to hear the Law." So she sat down on a stool and replenished the shuttle.

The people of Ālavi waited upon the Teacher and provided him with food, and when the meal was over, took his bowl and stood waiting for him to return thanks. Said the Teacher, "I came hither a journey of thirty leagues for the sake of a certain maiden of family. As yet she finds no opportunity to be present. When she finds opportunity to be present, I will return thanks." Having so said, he sat down and remained silent. Likewise did also his hearers remain silent. (When the Teacher is silent, neither men nor gods dare utter a sound.)

When the maiden had replenished the shuttle, she put it in her basket and set out in the direction of her father's workshop. On her way she stopped in the outer circle of the congregation and stood gazing at the Teacher. The Teacher also lifted up his head and gazed at her. By his manner of gazing at her she knew, "The Teacher, sitting in such a congregation, signifies by gazing at me that he desires me to come, that his sole desire is that I come into his very presence." So she set her shuttle-basket on the ground and [173] went into the presence of the Teacher.

(But why did the Teacher gaze at her? The following thought, we are told, occurred to him, "If this maiden go hence, she will die like unconverted folk, and uncertain will be her future state. But if she come to me, she will depart established in the Fruit of Conversion, and her future state will be certain, for she will be reborn in the World of the Tusita gods." We are told that there was no escape from death for her that day.)

At the mere hint of his look she approached the Teacher, and penetrating the rays of light, of colors six in number, that shone from his body, she paid obeisance to him and stood respectfully at one side. No sooner had she paid obeisance to the Teacher and taken her stand beside him, seated in silence in the midst of the assemblage there gathered together, than he thus addressed her, "Maiden, whence comest thou?" "I know not, Reverend Sir." "Whither goest thou?" "I know not, Reverend Sir." "Thou knowest not?" "I know, Reverend Sir." "Thou knowest?" "I know not, Reverend Sir." Thus did the Teacher ask her four questions. The multitude were offended and said, "Look you, this daughter of a weaver talks as she pleases with the Supremely Enlightened. When he asked her, 'Whence comest thou?' she should have answered, 'From the weaver's house.'

And when he asked her, 'Whither goest thou?' she should have answered, 'To the weaver's workshop.'"

The Teacher put the multitude to silence and asked her, "Maiden, when I asked thee, 'Whence comest thou?' why didst thou say, 'I know not?'" She answered, "Reverend Sir, thou thyself dost know that I come from the house of my father, a weaver. So when thou didst ask me, 'Whence comest thou?' I knew very well that thy meaning was, 'Whence didst thou come when thou wast reborn here?' But as for me, whence came I when I was reborn here, that know I not." Then said the Teacher to her, "Well said, well said, O maiden! Thou hast answered correctly the question I asked thee." [174]

Thus did the Teacher congratulate her, and having so done, asked her yet another question, "When I asked thee, 'Whither goest thou?' why didst thou say, 'I know not?'" "Reverend Sir, thou thyself dost know that I go to the weaver's workshop with shuttle-basket in hand. So when thou didst ask me, 'Whither goest thou?' I knew very well that thy meaning was, 'When thou goest hence, where wilt thou be reborn?' But as for me, where I shall be reborn when I have passed from this present existence, that know I not." Then said the Teacher to her, "Thou hast answered correctly the question I asked thee."

Thus did the Teacher congratulate her the second time, and having so done, asked her yet another question, "When I asked thee, 'Knowest thou not?' why didst thou say, 'I know?'" "Reverend Sir, this I know, that I shall surely die; and therefore said I so." Then said the Teacher to her, "Thou hast answered correctly the question I asked thee."

Thus did the Teacher congratulate her the third time, and having so done, asked her yet another question, "When I asked thee, 'Knowest thou?' why didst thou say, 'I know not?'" "This only do I know, Reverend Sir, that I shall surely die; but at what time I shall die, whether in the night or in the daytime, whether in the morning or at what other time soever, that know I not; and therefore said I so." Then said the Teacher to her, "Thou hast answered correctly the question I asked thee."

Thus did the Teacher congratulate her the fourth time, and having so done, addressed the assemblage as follows, "So many of you as failed to understand the words she spoke, ye only were offended. For they that possess not the Eye of Understanding, they only are blind;

[175] they that possess the Eye of Understanding, they only see.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza:

174. Blind is this world; few are there here that see;
As few go to heaven as birds escape from a net.

At the conclusion of the discourse that maiden was established in the Fruit of Conversion.

Then the maiden took her shuttle-basket and went to her father. He was asleep even as he sat at the loom. Not observing that he was asleep, she presented the shuttle-basket. As she did so, the basket hit the tip of the loom and fell with a clatter. Her father awoke, and accidentally, as a result of taking hold of the loom, gave it a pull, whereupon the tip of the loom swung around and [176] struck the maiden in the breast. Then and there she died and was reborn in the World of the Tusita gods. Her father looked at her as she lay there, her whole body spotted with blood, and saw that she was dead.

Straightway there arose within him intense grief. Wailing, “There is none other that can extinguish my grief,” he went to the Teacher and told him what had happened. “Reverend Sir,” said he, “Extinguish my grief.” The Teacher comforted him, saying, “Grieve not, disciple, for in the round of existences without conceivable beginning, thou hast even thus, over the death of thy daughter, shed tears more abundant than the water contained in the four great oceans.” In this wise did the Teacher discourse on the round of existences without conceivable beginning. The disciple’s grief was assuaged, and he requested the Teacher to admit him to the Order. Afterwards he made his full profession and in no long time attained Arahatsip.

XIII. 8. THIRTY MONKS ¹

Swans follow the track of the sun. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to thirty monks.

For one day thirty monks residing in foreign parts came to visit the Teacher. Elder Ānanda saw those monks just as he was approaching the Teacher to wait upon him. So he thought to himself, “I will wait until the Teacher has exchanged friendly greetings with these monks, and then I will wait upon the Teacher.” [177] Accordingly he waited at the gate. When the Teacher had exchanged friendly greetings with them, he preached the Law to them in a pleasing manner. After listening to the Law all those monks attained Arahatsip. Thereupon they soared aloft and departed through the air.

¹ Text: N iii. 176–177.

When they tarried, Elder Ānanda approached the Teacher and said, "Reverend Sir, thirty monks came here. Where are they?" "Gone, Ānanda." "By what path did they go, Reverend Sir?" "Through the air, Ānanda." "But, Reverend Sir, have they already rid themselves of the Depravities?" "Yes, Ānanda. After hearing me preach the Law, they attained Arahatsip." Now at that moment some swans came flying through the air. Said the Teacher, "Ānanda, he who has fully developed the Four Grades of Magical Power, flies through the air like a swan." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

175. Swans follow the track of the sun; they that possess magical power go through the air;

The resolute are conducted out of this world, having conquered Māra and his train.

XIII. 9. CIÑCĀ FALSELY ACCUSES THE BUDDHA ¹

If a man break one commandment. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Ciñcā Māṇavikā. [178]

For in the First Period of Enlightenment the disciples of the Possessor of the Ten Forces multiplied and gods and men innumerable descended upon Holy Ground. And as the sum of his virtues became noised abroad, rich gain and high honor were bestowed upon him. But as for the heretics, lost to them were gain and honor alike, even as fireflies lose their brilliance before the coming of the sun. And they gathered in the street and cried out, "Is the monk Gotama the only Buddha? We also are Buddhas! Does that alone which is given to him yield abundant fruit? That which is given to us returns abundant fruit also. Therefore to us do ye give alms; upon us do ye bestow honor." With such words as these did they appeal to the multitude, but for all their appeals, they got neither gain nor honor the more. Accordingly they met together in secret and considered within themselves, "By what means can we cast reproach upon the monk Gotama before men and so put an end to the gain and honor bestowed upon him?"

¹ The Story of the Present is almost word for word the same as the Introduction to Jātaka 472: iv. 187-189. Cf. Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 284-286. Of the story of Prince Paduma and the queen, only a brief outline is given. Cf. the story of Sundarī, xxxii. 1; also Feer's comparative study of the stories of Ciñcā and Sundarī in JA., 1897, 288-317. Text: N iii. 178-183.

Now at that time there lived in Sāvatti a certain wandering nun named Ciñcā Mānavikā. She possessed surpassing beauty and loveliness; a very celestial nymph was she; from her body proceeded forth rays of light. Now a certain harsh counselor made this proposal, "With the assistance of this woman we shall be able to cast reproach upon the monk Gotama, and so put an end to the gain and honor bestowed upon him." "That is the way!" exclaimed the heretics, agreeing to his proposal.

Ciñcā Mānavikā went to the monastery of the heretics, saluted them, and stood waiting; but the heretics had nothing to say to her. Thereupon she said, "What fault do you find in me?" This question she repeated three times; then she said, "Noble sirs, I appeal to you for an answer. Noble sirs, what fault do you find in me? Why do you not speak to me?" "Sister," replied the heretics, "know you not the monk Gotama, who goes about doing us harm, depriving us of gain and honor alike?" [179] "No, noble sirs, I know him not; but is there anything I can do to help you in this matter?" "Sister, if you wish us well, summon up your resources, contrive to cast reproach upon the monk Gotama, and so put an end to the gain and honor bestowed upon him." "Very well, noble sirs," replied Ciñcā Mānavikā, "I will take all the responsibility; have no anxiety as to the outcome." So saying, she departed.

From that time on, she employed all of her skill in the arts of a woman to effect her purpose. When the residents of Sāvatti were returning from Jetavana after listening to the Law, she would put on a cloak of the color of cochineal, and bearing perfumes and garlands in her hands, would walk in the direction of Jetavana. "Where are you going at this time of day?" people would ask her. "What business of yours is it where I am going?" she would reply. She would spend the night near Jetavana at the monastery of the heretics, and early the following morning, when throngs of lay disciples were coming out of the city for the purpose of rendering the morning greeting to the Teacher, she would wend her way back and reënter the city. "Where have you spent the night?" people would ask her. "What business of yours is it where I have spent the night?" she would reply.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

forthwith set out with four deities. The deities turned themselves into little mice. With one bite of their teeth these little mice severed the cords with which the disk of wood was fastened to the belly of the woman. At that moment the wind blew up the cloak which was wrapped about her, and the disk of wood fell upon her feet, [181] cutting off the toes of both of her feet.

Thereupon the multitude cried out, “A hag is reviling the Supremely Enlightened.” Forthwith they spat on her head, and taking clods of earth and sticks in their hands, drove her out of the Jetavana. As she passed out of sight of the Tathāgata, the great earth split apart, an abyss opened under her feet, and flames shot up from the Avīci Hell. Thus was she swallowed up, enveloped as it were in a scarlet blanket such as is presented by wealthy families, and reborn in the Avīci Hell. From that time the gain and honor of the heretics decreased, but the offerings presented to the Possessor of the Ten Forces increased more and more.

On the following day the monks began a discussion in the Hall of Truth: “Brethren, Ciñcā Māṇavikā, because she falsely accused the Possessor of Eminent Virtues, the Foremost Recipient of Offerings, the Supremely Exalted, came to utter ruin.” The Teacher approached and asked, “Monks, what are you sitting here now talking about?” When they told him, he said, “Monks, this is not the first time she has falsely accused me and come to utter ruin; she did the same thing in a previous state of existence also.” Having thus spoken, he said,

Unless a king discern clearly fault on the part of another,
After himself investigating carefully all of the facts,
Both small and great, he should not inflict punishment.

So saying, he related in detail this Mahā Paduma Jātaka,¹ found in the Twelfth Nipāta.

9 a. Story of the Past: The lewd woman and the virtuous youth

At that time, it appears, Ciñcā Māṇavikā was reborn as one of the chief consorts of the king, fellow-wife of the mother of the Future Buddha, Prince Mahā Paduma. She invited the Great Being to lie with her, and when he refused to do so, disfigured her own body with her own hands, feigned sickness, and told the king, “Your son brought me to this pass because I would not lie with him.” [182] The king, hearing this, was filled with rage, and straightway flung the Great Being down Robbers' Cliff. The deity dwelling in the mountain chasm cared for him and placed him safe and sound within the hood of the King of the Dragons. The King of the Dragons carried him to the Abode of the Dragons and honored him by conferring upon him half his kingly power. After the Great Being had dwelt there for a year, he conceived a desire to adopt the life of a religious. Accordingly he went to the Himālaya country, adopted the life of a religious, and in the course of time developed by the practice of Ecstatic Meditation the Supernatural Faculties.

¹ Jātaka 472: iv. 180–196.

Now a certain forester happened to see him there and reported the matter to the king. Thereupon the king went to him, exchanged friendly greetings with him, learned what had happened, and offered to bestow his kingdom upon the Great Being. The Great Being, however, declined his offer and admonished him as follows, "For my part, I have no desire to rule. But as for you, do you keep unimpaired the Ten Royal Virtues, avoid evil courses, and rule your kingdom justly." Thereupon the king arose from his seat in tears and went back to the city. On the way thither he asked his ministers, "Through whose fault was I separated from one endowed with such uprightness?" "Your chief consort was to blame for this, your majesty." Thereupon the king had her taken by the heels and flung head foremost down Robbers' Cliff. And entering his city, thenceforth he ruled his kingdom justly. At that time Prince Mahā Paduma was the Great Being, and the fellow-wife of his mother was Ciñcā Māṇavikā. End of Story of the Past.

When the Teacher had made this matter clear, he said, "Monks, in the case of those who have broken one commandment, those who have ceased to speak the truth, who have become confirmed in falsehood, who have abandoned hope of the next world, there is no evil deed which they will not commit." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

176. If a man break one commandment, if he speak lies,
If he abandon the next world, there is no evil deed he will not commit.

XIII. 10. GIFTS BEYOND COMPARE ¹

The niggardly go not. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Gifts beyond Compare. [183]

For once upon a time the Teacher returned from an alms-pilgrimage with his retinue of five hundred monks and entered the Jetavana. Thereupon the king went to the monastery and invited the Teacher to be his guest. On the following day he caused rich gifts to be prepared for the visiting monks and then summoned the citizens, saying, "Let them come hither and behold the gifts which I have prepared." The citizens went thither and beheld the gifts which the king had prepared. On the following day the citizens invited the Teacher to be their guest, and having prepared offerings, sent word to the king, saying, "Let the king come hither and behold the offerings which we also have prepared."

When the king saw the offerings which the citizens had prepared, he thought to himself, "These citizens have given more abundant offerings than I; I will therefore present offerings a second time." Accordingly he prepared offerings on the following day; when the citizens saw the offerings which the king had prepared, they also prepared offerings on the next day. Thus it happened that neither the king was able to outdo the citizens, nor [184] the citizens the king. Six times in succession the citizens increased the amount a hundred-fold and a thousandfold, preparing offerings on such a scale that no one might be able to say, "This or that is lacking in their offerings." When the king realized what they were doing, he thought to himself, "If I cannot provide offerings more abundant than these citizens, what is the use of my living any longer?" And he lay down, thinking over ways and means.

As he lay there, Queen Mallikā approached him and asked him, "Your majesty, why do you lie here thus? What makes you look so worn and weary?" Said the king, "My lady, do you not know?" Said the queen, "My lord, I do not know." So the king told her all about it. Then said Queen Mallikā to him, "My lord, be not disturbed; have you ever seen or heard of a king, a lord of the land, who has been outdone by his subjects? I will manage the offerings."

¹ Cf. Commentary on Dīgha, 19; also Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 297-298. Text: N iii. 183-189.

Thus spoke Queen Mallikā, and she spoke thus because she desired to provide Gifts beyond Compare. Then she said to the king, “Great king, give orders for the erection of a pavilion inclosing a circular space wherein monks shall sit to the number of five hundred, and let this pavilion be constructed out of the choicest wood of the Sal-tree; let the rest of the monks sit outside of this inclosed space. Order five hundred white parasols to be made, and let five hundred elephants take these parasols in their trunks and stand and hold them over the heads of the five hundred monks. Have eight or ten boats made of ruddy gold, and let them be placed in the center of the pavilion. Between every two monks let a young woman of the Warrior caste sit and crush perfumes. Let certain young women of the Warrior caste take fans in their hands, and let each young woman stand and fan two monks. Let other young women of the Warrior caste bring crushed perfumes in their hands and cast them into the golden boats. [185] Let other young women of the Warrior caste bring clusters of blue water-lilies, mingle them with the perfumes cast into the golden boats, and present the monks with scents. Now the citizens have neither daughters belonging to the Warrior caste, nor white parasols, nor elephants, so that by these means the citizens will be outdone by you. This is what you must do, great king.” The king replied, “Good, my lady! Your plan is a most excellent one.” And forthwith he gave orders that everything should be done just as the queen suggested.

It happened, however, that one monk lacked an elephant. When the king observed this, he said to Mallikā, “Dear wife, a single monk lacks a single elephant. What shall I do?” “What say you, my lord? Are there not five hundred elephants?” “Yes, my lady, there are. But the rest are rogue elephants, and when they see the monks, they are wont to become as wrathful as the monsoon winds.” “My lord, I know where a certain young rogue elephant might stand, holding a parasol with his trunk.” “Where shall we place him?” “Beside Venerable Elder Aṅgulimāla.” The king did so. Thereupon the young elephant thrust his tail between his legs, dropped both his ears, closed his eyes, and stood motionless. The multitude gazed at the elephant in wonderment, thinking to themselves, “What a way for so vicious an elephant to behave!”

The king waited upon the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha. Having so done, he saluted the Teacher, and said to him, “Reverend Sir, whatsoever goods are in this refectory, whether they be worthy or unworthy, I present them all to you.” [186]

Now in this act of almsgiving fourteen crores of treasure were given away in one single day. Four objects of priceless value were placed at the disposal of the Teacher: a white parasol, a couch whereon to rest, a stand, and a footstool. No one who gave gifts to the Buddhas thereafter was able to equal the gifts which were then presented by the king, wherefore those gifts came to be known as Gifts beyond Compare. It seems that this happens once to all the Buddhas, and that a woman always manages this for all.

Now the king had two ministers named Kāla and Junha. Kāla thought to himself, "How the king's fortune has diminished! In one single day fourteen crores of treasure have been spent! And these monks, after feasting upon these alms, will go away, lie down, and sleep! How the king's fortune has been wasted!" But Junha thought to himself, "Oh, what splendid gifts the king has presented! No one who does not occupy a king's station could make such a gift! Moreover, none make over the merit of their gifts to all living beings! As for me, I am thankful for these gifts which the king has presented!"

When the Teacher had finished his meal, the king took his bowl, that he might pronounce the words of thanksgiving. The Teacher thought to himself, "The king has given mighty gifts, like as when one sets in motion a mighty flood. Will the hearts of the populace be filled with faith, or will they not?" Perceiving the disposition of mind of those ministers, he became aware of the following, "If I pronounce words of thanksgiving appropriate to the gifts which the king has given, Kāla's head will split into seven pieces, and Junha will be established in the Fruit of Conversion." Therefore, out of pity for Kāla, he recited but a single Stanza consisting of four verses in honor of the king, who stood before him after giving gifts so splendid. Having so done, he arose from his seat and returned to the monastery. [187]

The monks asked Aṅgulimāla, "Brother, were you not afraid when you saw the rogue elephant standing before you, holding a white parasol?" "No, brethren, I was not afraid." The monks said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, Aṅgulimāla utters falsehood." The Teacher replied, "Monks, Aṅgulimāla has no fear. For monks like my son are of all the Noble who have rid themselves of the Depravities the noblest and have no fear." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza in the Brāhmana Vagga,

422. The noble, the eminent, the manly, the wise, the conqueror,
The pure, the sinless, the enlightened, him I call a Brahman.

The king was bitterly disappointed. Thought he, "After I had given gifts to so numerous a company, and had taken my stand before the Teacher, the Teacher omitted to pronounce words of thanksgiving commensurate with my gifts, uttered but a single Stanza, and then arose from his seat and departed. It must be that instead of presenting gifts appropriate to the Teacher, I presented gifts that were inappropriate; it must be that instead of giving such things as were suitable for gifts, I gave such things as were unsuitable for gifts. It must be that the Teacher is angry with me, for it is his invariable practice to return thanks to anyone soever in terms commensurate with gifts presented."

With this thought in mind, he went to the monastery, saluted the Teacher, and said this to him, "Reverend Sir, did I fail to give gifts such as I should have given, or err by giving, instead of such things as were suitable for gifts, things that were unsuitable for gifts?" [188] "Why do you ask, great king?" "You did not thank me in terms commensurate with the gifts which I had presented." "Great king, the gifts you presented were indeed suitable; Gifts beyond Compare such as you presented can be presented but once to a single Buddha; gifts such as these are hardly to be presented a second time." "But, Reverend Sir, why did you not thank me in terms commensurate with the gifts which I had presented?" "Because the assembled company was contaminated, great king." "Reverend Sir, what fault was there in the company?" The Teacher then told him of the disposition of mind of the two ministers, and informed him that it was out of pity for Kāla that he refrained from returning thanks.

The king asked Kāla, "Is it true, Kāla, that you entertained these thoughts?" "It is true," replied Kāla. Then said the king, "I never took what belonged to you, but with the assistance of son and wife, gave only what belonged to me. Wherein have I done you wrong? Begone! What I have given, I have given. But as for you, depart out of my kingdom." Having thus banished Kāla from his kingdom, he summoned Junha and asked him, "Is the report true that you thought thus and so?" "It is true," replied Junha. "You have done well, uncle," replied the king. "I am content. Take my retinue, and bestow alms for seven days precisely as I have done." Having yielded the kingdom to him for seven days, the king said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, behold what manner of thing this simpleton has done. After I had bestowed thus alms, he delivered this blow at me." The Teacher replied, "Yes, great king; simpletons take no delight in alms presented by others and are therefore destined to future punishment. But wise men take delight in alms presented by others and therefore go to heaven.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

177. The niggardly go not to the World of the Gods; simpletons applaud not almsgiving;

But the wise man applauds almsgiving, and therefore wins happiness in the world beyond. [189]

At the conclusion of the lesson Junha was established in the Fruit of Conversion; the assembled multitude also profited by the lesson. Junha, having attained the Fruit of Conversion, bestowed alms for a period of seven days precisely as the king had done.

XIII. 11. VIRTUE BOUGHT AND PAID FOR ¹

In comparison with sovereignty over the earth. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Kāla, son of Anāthapiṇḍika.

Tradition has it that Kāla, although the son of so distinguished a father, a treasurer endowed with faith, never showed any desire to visit the Teacher, or to see him when he came to his father's house, or to hear the Law, or to perform services for the Order. Moreover, whenever his father said to him, “Dear son, do not do this,” he paid no attention to what he said. Now his father thought to himself, “If this son of mine adopts such an attitude as this and acts accordingly, the Avīci Hell will be his end. But it would not look well for me if my son went to Hell before my very eyes. Now there is no living being here in the world who may not be broken by gifts; I will therefore break him with gifts.” So he said to his son, “Dear son, take upon yourself the obligations of Fast-day, go to the monastery, listen to the Law, and then return. If you will do so, [190] I will give you a hundred pieces of money.” “You will really give me this, dear father?” “That will I, dear son.”

After his father had repeated his promise three times, Kāla took upon himself the obligations of Fast-day and went to the monastery. But caring not to listen to the Law, he lay down to sleep in a pleasant place and returned home early in the morning. Thereupon his father

¹ Text : N iii. 189–192.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

I persuaded you to take upon yourself the obligations of Fast-day and to go to the monastery by promising to give you a thousand pieces of money; here are your thousand pieces of money.” When Kāla saw the thousand pieces of money presented to him in the very presence of the Teacher, he was greatly embarrassed and said, “I care naught for the money.” “Take the money, dear son,” said the father. But the son refused to touch it.

Then his father saluted the Teacher and said, “Reverend Sir, the demeanor of my son to-day pleases me.” “How is that, great treasurer?” “Day before yesterday I sent him to the monastery, saying to him, ‘I will give you a hundred pieces of money.’ Yesterday he refused to eat because I did not give him the money; but to-day, when I give him the money, he refuses to touch it.” The Teacher replied, “It is even so, great treasurer. To-day, in attaining the Fruit of Conversion, your son has attained that which surpasses the attainment of a Universal Monarch, the attainment of the World of the Gods, the attainment of the World of Brahmā.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

178. In comparison with sovereignty over the earth, in comparison with going to heaven,

In comparison with supremacy over all the worlds, the Fruit of Conversion is of supreme excellence.

BOOK XIV. THE ENLIGHTENED, BUDDHA VAGGA

XIV. 1. THE BUDDHA HAS NAUGHT TO DO WITH WOMEN ¹

There is one whose victory. This religious instruction, originally given by the Teacher while upon the Throne of Enlightenment with reference to the daughters of Māra, was repeated in the kingdom of the Kurus to the Brahman Māgandiyā. [193]

1 a. The Buddha spurns the maiden Māgandiyā

The story goes that a Brahman named Māgandiyā, dwelling in the kingdom of the Kurus, had a daughter likewise named Māgandiyā, who possessed surpassing beauty. Many men of wealth and social position, both Brahmans and Khattiyas, desired her to wife and sent word to Māgandiyā, saying, “Give us your daughter.” But he refused them all alike, saying, “You are not good enough for my daughter.”

Now one day, as the Teacher surveyed the world at early dawn, he perceived that Māgandiyā had entered the Net of his Knowledge. Forthwith considering within himself, “What now will happen?” he perceived that both the Brahman and his wife were ripe for the Three Paths and Fruits. Now the Brahman tended the fire regularly every day without the village; accordingly the Teacher took bowl and robe early in the morning and went to that very place. The Brahman surveyed the majestic form of the Teacher and thought to himself, “There is no man in this world comparable to this man; [194] this man is suitable for my daughter; I will give my daughter to this man.” So he said to the Teacher, “Monk, I have a single daughter, and I have looked in vain to find a man suitable to be her husband. I have not given her to any one. But you are suitable for her. I wish to give you my daughter to wife; wait right here until I fetch her." The Teacher listened to his words, but expressed neither approval nor disapproval.

¹ With xiv. 1 a cf. ii. 1. 5. The source of this story is Sutta Nipāta, iv. 9, or some derivative thereof. xiv. 1 b is derived from Nidānakathā, Jātaka, i. 78²⁹–79³⁰; translated by Rhys Davids, Buddhist Birth Stories, pp. 107–109. For close parallels to xiv. 1, see Divyāvadāna, xxxvi, Part 1, pp. 515–529; also the Sanskrit fragment from Eastern Turkestan described by A. F. R. Hoernle, JRAS., 1916, 709 ff. Text: N iii. 193–199.

The Brahman went home and said to his wife, "Wife, to-day I saw a man suited to be the husband of our daughter; let us give her to him." So the Brahman had his daughter arrayed in her beautiful garments, and taking daughter and wife with him, went to the place where he had talked with the Teacher. A great multitude also, agitated and excited, went forth with them. The Teacher, instead of remaining in the place mentioned by the Brahman, moved away and stood in another place, leaving a footprint where he had stood before. (It is said that when the Buddhas establish a footprint, saying, "Let So-and-so see this footprint," the footprint appears only in a trodden place and not elsewhere; nowhere else can anyone see it.)

The Brahman's wife, who accompanied him, asked him, "Where is this man?" The Brahman replied, "I said to him, 'Remain in this place.'" Looking all about, the Brahman saw the footprint and pointed it out to his wife, saying, "This is his footprint." Now the Brahman's wife was familiar with the verses relating to signs and immediately said to the Brahman, "Brahman, this is no footprint of one who follows the Five Lusts." The Brahman replied, "Wife, you are always seeing a crocodile in a drop of water. When I said to that monk, 'I will give you my daughter,' he accepted my proposal." The Brahman's wife replied, "Brahman, you may say what you like, but this is the footprint only of one who is free from lust." So saying, she pronounced the following Stanza, [195]

195. In the footprint of a lustful man the instep will not show;
The footprint of a wicked man will be violently pressed down;
Of one infatuate, the footprint will be shuffling.
This is the sort of footprint made by one who has rolled back the Veil of Passion.

Then said the Brahman to his wife, "Wife, do not rattle on thus; come with me in silence." Advancing a little way, he saw the Teacher, whereupon he pointed him out to his wife and said, "There is the man!" And approaching him, he said to him, "Monk, I will give you my daughter to wife." The Teacher, instead of saying, "I have no need of your daughter," said, "Brahman, I have something to say to you; listen to me." The Brahman replied, "Say it, monk; I will listen." Thereupon the Teacher related to the Brahman the story of his past life, beginning with the Great Retirement. The following is a synopsis of the story:

1 b. The Buddha spurns the daughters of Māra

The Great Being, having renounced the glory of dominion, mounted Kanthaka, and with Channa for companion, proceeded forth on the Great Retirement. As he approached the gate of the city, Māra, who stood near, said to him, "Siddhattha, return upon your way; seven days hence the magic wheel of a Universal Monarch will be manifested to you." The Great Being replied, "I too know that, Māra, but I do not desire it." "Then for what purpose are you going forth on the Great Retirement?" "That I may acquire Omniscience." "Well then, if from this day forth you think a lustful or malevolent or cruel thought, I shall know what to do in your case."

And from that time on, Māra pursued the Great Being for seven years, awaiting his opportunity. For six years the Teacher practiced austerities, and when, through his individual effort, he had attained Omniscience at the foot of the Bo-tree, he sat down at the foot of the Goatherd's Banyan-tree, experiencing the bliss of emancipation. At that time Māra sat down by the highway, overwhelmed with sorrow at the thought, "All this time I have pursued him, seeking my opportunity, [196] but have found no flaw in him; now he has escaped from my power."

Now Māra's three daughters, Craving, Discontent, and Lust, said to themselves, "Our father is nowhere to be seen; where can he be now?" Looking all about, they saw him sitting there, whereupon they approached him and asked him, "Dear father, why are you so downcast and depressed?" He told them what was the matter. Then they said to him, "Dear father, be not disturbed; we will bring him under our control and fetch him hither." "Dear daughters, it is not possible for anyone to bring this man under control." "Dear father, we are women; we will bind him fast with the fetters of lust; so will we fetch him hither. As for you, be not disturbed." And approaching the Teacher, they said to him, "Monk, we would be your humble slaves." The Teacher paid no attention to their words, nor did he so much as open his eyes and look at them.

Said the daughters of Māra again, "Many and various are the tastes of men. Some like maidens, others like women in the prime of life, others like women who have reached middle life, while still others like women who have passed middle life. We will tempt him in various forms.” So one after another, they assumed the forms of women of various ages, creating by supernatural power each a hundred female forms. And in the guise of maidens, women who had not yet given birth to a child, women who had given birth to one child, women who had given birth to two children, women who had reached middle life, and women who had reached old age, they approached the Exalted One six times and said to him, “Monk, we would be your humble slaves.”

But neither did the Exalted One pay any attention to that, but remained free, even as though the elements of being had been utterly destroyed. [197] But when, after that, they did not retire, the Teacher said to them, “Depart; what do you see, that you strive thus? Such actions as these should be performed before those who have not rid themselves of the lusts and other evil passions. The Tathāgata, however, has rid himself of the lusts and other evil passions. Why will ye try to bring me into your control?” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

179. There is one whose victory cannot be turned to defeat,
Unto victory over whom no one in the world can attain,
The Buddha, unlimited in power, the trackless.
By what track can you lead him?

180. There is one in whom there is no Craving,
With its snares and poisons, to lead him whithersoever,
The Buddha, unlimited in power, the trackless.
By what track can you lead him? [198]

At the conclusion of the lesson many divinities obtained Comprehension of the Law, and the daughters of Māra then and there disappeared.

When the Teacher had completed his religious instruction, he said, “Māgandiya, when long ago I beheld these three daughters of Māra, possessed of bodies comparable to masses of gold, free from phlegm and the other bodily impurities, even then I had no desire for the pleasures of love. But as for your daughter’s body, it is a corpse filled with the thirty-two constituents, an impure vessel, as it were, painted without. Were my foot smeared with filth, and were she to lie on my threshold, I would not touch her even with the sole of my foot.” And when he had thus spoken, he pronounced the following Stanza,

Having seen Craving, Discontent, and Lust,
 I had no desire for the pleasures of love.
 What is this body, filled with urine and dung?
 I should not be willing to touch it, even with my foot.

XIV. 2. THE TWIN MIRACLE ¹

They that are devoted to meditation, they that are steadfast. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher at the gate of the city Saṅkassa with reference to many gods and men. But the story begins at Rājagaha. [199]

2 a. Piṇḍola Bhāradvāja performs a miracle

For once upon a time a treasurer of Rājagaha went to the river Ganges to sport in the water. To avoid the risk of losing his jewels and clothing and to prevent them from slipping away while his mind was otherwise occupied, he put them in an openwork wicker basket. Now a certain red-sandalwood tree which grew on the bank of the Ganges above, whose roots were washed by the waters of the Ganges, fell into the Ganges, was gradually broken up by the rocks in the river, and went to pieces. A fragment of the tree about the size of a water-jar, which had been ground by the rocks and washed by the waves until it was round and smooth, and which had been carried along by the current and in the course of time had become wrapped round and round with Sevāla plants, finally drifted against the treasurer's wicker basket, and was caught therein.

"What is this?" said the treasurer. "A fragment of a tree," replied his companions. The treasurer ordered it brought to him.

¹ Parallels: Jātaka 483: iv. 263–267; Divyāvadāna, xii: 143–166; Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 300–313. The Cingalese version translated by Hardy follows closely the Dhammapada Commentary version. Materially different are the Jātaka and Divyāvadāna versions. The Dhammapada Commentary version appears to be entirely independent of the Jātaka version. The Jātaka version is very brief (only about one fifth as long as the Dhammapada Commentary version), and lacks the account of the finding of the block of wood and the fashioning of the bowl, the creation of the jeweled walk, and the offers of the six disciples to perform miracles. The Dhammapada Commentary version gives a multitude of details not found in the Jātaka version, especially in its accounts of Piṇḍola's miracle, the Twin Miracle proper, and the preaching of the Abhidhamma in the World of the Thirty-three. xiv. 2 a (text: iii. 199¹²–203²²) is an elaboration of Vinaya, Culla Vagga, v. 8: ii. 110–112. The Dhammapada Commentary version of the Twin Miracle, the Preaching of the Abhidhamma, and the Descent of the Deities, is referred to at Milindapañha, 349²¹, 350²⁻⁴. Text: N iii. 199–230.

“What kind of wood is it?” thought the treasurer. In order to find out for himself, he proceeded to pare it with the blade of an adze, and immediately discovered that it was a block of red sandalwood of the color of red lac. [200] Now the treasurer was neither orthodox nor heretical in his views, but was impartial to both. He thought to himself, “I have a great quantity of red sandalwood in my house; what shall I do with this?”. Then the following thought occurred to him, “There are many men living in the world who say, ‘We are Arahats, we are Arahats.’ For my part, however, I know not a single Arahata. I will have the lathe in my house started up and a bowl turned; and this bowl I will suspend in the air by a cord from a series of bamboos, sixty cubits from the ground. Then I will make the following proclamation, ‘If any be an Arahata, let him fly through the air and take the bowl.’ If any shall succeed in taking the bowl, I will become his disciple, and my son and my wife likewise.” Accordingly he had a bowl turned, suspended it from a series of bamboos, and made the following proclamation, “If any in this world be an Arahata, let him fly through the air and take this bowl.”

Six religious teachers said to him, “This bowl is just the thing for us; give it to us.” But the treasurer replied, “Fly through the air and take it.” On the sixth day the naked ascetic Nāthaputta said to his disciples, “Go say to the treasurer, ‘This bowl is just the thing for our teacher. Do not insist on our flying through the air for the sake of a mere trifle. Give us the bowl.’” [201] They went and delivered his message to the treasurer, who replied, “He only shall have the bowl who can fly through the air and take it.”

Nāthaputta himself desired to go. Accordingly he gave orders to his disciples, “I will lift up a single hand and a single foot, and act as though I were about to fly up. Then you must say to me, ‘Teacher, what are you doing? Do not reveal hidden powers of Arahata-ship to the multitude merely for the sake of a wooden bowl.’ So saying, you must grasp me by the hands and feet, pull me down, and throw me on the ground.” Then Nāthaputta went and said to the treasurer, “Great treasurer, this bowl is not at all the thing for others. Do not insist on my flying through the air for the sake of a mere trifle. Give me the bowl.” “Reverend Sir, fly through the air and take it; that is the only way.”

Then Nāthaputta said to his disciples, “Well then, come away, come away.” So saying, he led them away. Then he said, “I shall now fly up into the air.” So saying, he lifted up a single hand and a

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

himself plainly before the people. When the multitude saw the Elder, they cried out, “Reverend Piṇḍolabhāradvāja, take firm hold of the rock; do not destroy us all.” Thereupon the Elder kicked the rock away from him, whereupon the rock settled in the same place in which it had lain before. And the Elder lighted on the top of the treasurer’s house.

When the Elder saw him, he prostrated himself on his breast and said, “Master, pray descend.” When the Elder had descended, the treasurer provided him with a seat, caused him to lower his bowl, filled it with the four sweet foods, and returned it to the Elder. The Elder took his bowl and set out in the direction of the monastery. Thereupon all those who, because of absence either in the forest or in the village, had not seen that miracle, gathered together and began to follow the Elder, saying to him, “Reverend Sir, show us also the miracle.” So the Elder repeated the miracle for them also, and having so done, continued his course to the monastery.

The Teacher, who was following the Elder, heard the noise of the multitude as they roared out their applause, and asked the Elder Ānanda, “Ānanda, who is it they are applauding?” “Reverend Sir,” replied the Elder Ānanda, “Piṇḍolabhāradvāja flew up into the air and took the bowl made of red sandalwood, and the multitude are applauding him.” So the Teacher summoned Bhāradvāja and said to him, “Is the report true that you have done this?” “Yes, Reverend Sir, it is true.” “Bhāradvāja, why did you do this?” Thereupon the Teacher rebuked the Elder, caused him to break that bowl to pieces, and directed him to give the fragments to the monks to grind into powder for sandal-paste. And he laid down a precept forbidding the exercise of the supernatural powers for such purposes in the future. [204]

2 b. The Buddha promises to perform a miracle

When the heretics heard that the monk Gotama had caused that bowl to be broken to pieces and that he had laid down a precept forbidding his disciples to perform miracles, they said, “Even if their lives depend upon it, the disciples of the monk Gotama will not disobey the precept which he has laid down. Moreover the monk Gotama will also keep that precept. Now is our chance!” So they went through the streets of the city proclaiming, “It is our wont to keep our own powers hidden, and it was for this reason that on a recent occasion we refused to display our own powers for the sake of a wooden bowl. But the disciples of the monk Gotama displayed their powers to the multitude all for the sake of a paltry bowl. The monk Gotama in his wisdom caused that bowl to be broken to pieces and laid down a precept forbidding his disciples to perform miracles. Henceforth we will perform miracles only with him."

King Bimbisāra heard their talk, went to the Teacher, and said, "Reverend Sir, is the report true that you have forbidden your disciples to perform miracles?" "Yes, great king." "The heretics are saying, 'We will perform miracles with you;' what do you intend to do about this?" "If they perform miracles, I will do the same." "Have you not laid down a precept forbidding the performance of miracles?" "Great king, I have not laid down a precept for myself; the precept was intended to apply only to my disciples." "Do you mean that the precept which you laid down was intended to apply to everyone but yourself?"

"Well, great king, I will answer that question by another. Great king, it is true, is it not, that you have a pleasure-garden in your kingdom?" "Yes, Reverend Sir." "Great king, if the populace should eat the mangoes and other fruits in your garden, what would you do to them?" "I should inflict punishment upon them, Reverend Sir." "But you would have the right to eat them yourself?" "Yes, Reverend Sir: I am not liable to punishment; I should have the right to eat whatever belongs to me." "Great king, even as [205] your authority extends throughout your kingdom thirty leagues in extent, and you are not yourself liable to punishment for eating mangoes and other fruits in your own garden, while others are liable to punishment for so doing, even so my authority extends throughout hundreds of thousands of millions of worlds, and while I may overstep the precepts which I have myself laid down, others may not so do; therefore, great king, I shall perform a miracle."

When the heretics heard these words, they said to each other, "Now we are lost; the monk Gotama declares that the precept which he laid down was intended to apply to his disciples, but not to himself, and he further declares that it is his intention to perform a miracle himself; what are we to do?" And they took counsel together. The king asked the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, when do you intend to perform this miracle?" "On the day of full moon of the month Āsālhi, four months hence." "Where will you perform it, Reverend Sir?" "Near Sāvatti, great king." (Now why did the Teacher appoint a place so far distant? Because Sāvatti is the place where all the Buddhas have performed their great miracles; it was likewise to permit the assemblage of a great multitude. For these reasons the Teacher appointed a place far distant.)

The heretics, hearing these words, said to each other, “Four months hence the monk Gotama will perform a miracle at Sāvatti. Henceforth, therefore, we must pursue him unremittingly. When the populace see us, they will ask, ‘What does this mean?’ and we will reply, ‘You will remember that we said, “We will perform a miracle with the monk Gotama;” now he is running away from us; but since we are not willing that he should get away from us, we are pursuing him.’”

When the Teacher had gone his round for alms in Rājagaha, he came forth from the city. The heretics likewise came forth in his train. Wherever he took his meal, there they lodged for the night; wherever he lodged for the night, there they took their breakfast. When the people asked them, “What does this mean?” they gave the same answer they had before agreed upon. [206] “We will see the miracle,” cried out the multitude, and followed after. In due course the Teacher reached Sāvatti. The heretics accompanied him thither. On reaching the city they stirred up their retainers, obtained for themselves a hundred thousand pieces of money, caused a pavilion to be erected with pillars of acacia wood, and caused it to be covered with blue lotus flowers. Having so done, they sat down and said, “Here we will perform a miracle.”

King Pasenadi Kosala approached the Teacher and said, “Reverend Sir, the heretics have caused a pavilion to be erected; shall I also erect a pavilion for you?” “There is no need of so doing, great king; I have a pavilion-maker.” “Reverend Sir, who is there here besides me that can build a pavilion for you?” “Sakka king of the gods, great king.” “Reverend Sir, where will you perform the miracle?” “At the foot of the mango-tree which is called Gaṇḍa’s, great king.” The heretics heard the words, “He will perform the miracle at the foot of the mango-tree.” Straightway they tore up by the roots all of the mango-trees for a league around, even those that had sprung up that very day, and threw them all into the forest.

2 c. Preliminary miracles

On the day of full moon of the month Āsālhi the Teacher entered the city. On the same day Gaṇḍa, the king's gardener, seeing a large ripe mango in a basket of leaves made by red ants, drove away the crows which had been attracted by its savor and flavor, picked up the mango, and set out with it, intending to take it to the king. But seeing the Teacher by the way, he thought to himself, "If the king eats this mango, he will possibly give me eight or sixteen pieces of money for it, and that will not suffice to keep me alive during one state of existence; but if I give this to the Teacher, [207] it will avail to my salvation time without end." Accordingly he presented the ripe mango to the Teacher.

The Teacher looked at the Elder Ānanda. The Elder removed the outer covering from the gift intended for the great king and placed the mango in the Teacher's hands. The Teacher presented his bowl, received the ripe mango, and intimated that he desired to sit down right there. The Elder spread his robe and presented it. When the Teacher was seated, the Elder strained water, crushed the ripe mango, made a sherbet, and gave it to the Teacher. When the Teacher had drunk the mango-sherbet, he said to Gaṇḍa, "Dig up the earth right here and plant the seed of the mango." The gardener did as he was told.

The Teacher washed his hands over the place where the mango had been planted. The very moment he washed his hands, a mango-tree sprang up, with a stalk as thick as a plow-handle, fifty cubits in height. Five great branches shot forth, each fifty cubits in length, four to the four cardinal points and one to the heavens above. Instantly the tree was covered with flowers and fruits; indeed on one side it bore a cluster of ripe mangoes. Approaching from behind, the monks picked the ripe mangoes, ate them, and then withdrew. When the king heard that a mango-tree so wonderful had sprung up, he gave orders that no one should cut it down, and posted a guard. Because the tree had been planted by the gardener Gaṇḍa, it became known as Gaṇḍa's Mango-tree.

Men of the baser sort also ate the ripe mango fruits and cried out, "You rascally heretics, when you heard that the monk Gotama would do a miracle at the foot of Gaṇḍa's Mango-tree, you caused all the young mangoes [208] for a league around, even those that have sprung up this very day, to be torn up by the roots; yet here is Gaṇḍa's mango-tree." So saying, they took the seeds and cores of the mango-fruits which remained, and threw them at the heretics.

Sakka ordered the deity Wind-cloud, "Uproot the pavilion of the heretics with your winds and throw it into the cesspool." Wind-cloud did so. Then Sakka ordered the Sun-deity, "Check the course of the sun's disk and scorch them." The Sun-deity did so. Then Sakka again ordered Wind-cloud, "Wind-cloud, set the chariot of the wind in motion and go forth." Wind-cloud did so. Now the bodies of the heretics were streaming with sweat, and Wind-cloud sprinkled them with a shower of dust until they looked like red ants. Then Sakka again ordered Wind-cloud, "Cause countless great drops of rain to fall." Wind-cloud did so, and the heretics looked like mottled cows. Naked as they were, they fled helter-skelter.

As they were running away, a certain farmer who was a supporter of Pūraṇa Kassapa, thought, "To-morrow is the day when my noble teachers will perform their miracle; I must go see the miracle." So unyoking his cattle and taking with him a vessel of broth which he had brought with him early in the morning, and a rope, he set out to return home. When he saw Pūraṇa running away in such wise, he said to him, "Reverend Sir, I set out with the thought in my mind, 'I will go see my noble teachers perform their miracle.' Where are you going?" Pūraṇa replied, "Why should you wish to see a miracle? Give me your waterpot and rope." [209] The farmer did so. Pūraṇa took the waterpot and rope, and going to the bank of the river, tied the waterpot to his neck with the rope, and threw himself into the stream. There was a splash of water-bubbles, and Pūraṇa died and was reborn in the Avīci Hell.

The Teacher created a jeweled walk in the air, one end of which rested upon the eastern rim of the world and the other upon the western rim. As the shadows of evening drew on, there assembled a multitude thirty-six leagues in extent. The Teacher, thinking to himself, "This is the time for me to perform the miracle," came forth from the Perfumed Chamber and stood on the terrace.

At that moment a female lay disciple named Gharanī, a woman possessed of magical power, who had attained the Fruit of the Third Path, approached the Teacher and said, "Reverend Sir, so long as you have a daughter like me remaining alive, you will have no occasion to weary yourself; I will perform a miracle." "Gharanī, what miracle will you perform?" "Reverend Sir, I will convert the great earth which lies inclosed within the circle of the world into water, and then I will dive into the water like a water-bird and reappear at the eastern rim of the world. Likewise will I reappear at the western rim, and at the northern rim, and at the southern rim of the world, and at the centre. People will ask, 'Who is that?' and other people will answer, 'That is Gharanī. If such is the supernatural power of a mere woman, what must the supernatural power of a Buddha be like?' [210] Under such circumstances the heretics will flee away without so much as waiting to see you." The Teacher replied, "I know very well, Gharanī, that you are perfectly able to perform such a miracle as you describe; but this basket of flowers was not prepared for you." With these words he declined her offer. Gharanī said to herself, "The Teacher declines my offer; doubtless there is some one else able to perform a greater miracle than that which I am able to perform." So saying, she stepped aside.

Thought the Teacher to himself, "Thus will the merits of these persons also become manifest; thus will they send up their shouts of applause in the midst of a company thirty-six leagues in extent." And he asked yet others, "What manner of miracle will you perform?" "Thus and thus will we perform a miracle, Reverend Sir," they replied; and standing before the Teacher, they sent up shouts of applause. The story goes that among others Culla Anāthapiṇḍika thought to himself, "So long as the Teacher has a son like me alive, a lay disciple who has attained the Fruit of the Third Path, he will have no occasion to weary himself." Accordingly he said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, I will perform a miracle." "What manner of miracle will you perform?" asked the Teacher. "Reverend Sir, I will assume a form like that of Mahā Brahmā, twelve leagues in size, and in the midst of this company, with a sound like the roar of thunder that accompanies a heavy rainstorm, I will shake the earth even as Mahā Brahmā shakes the earth. The multitude will ask, 'What sound is that?' and the answer will be, 'That is the sound of an earthquake produced by Culla Anāthapiṇḍika.' The heretics will say, 'If such is the supernatural power of a layman, what must be the supernatural power of a Buddha?' And they will flee away without so much as waiting to see you." The Teacher repeated the answer he had given to Gharanī, "I know that you possess this power," and declined his offer to perform the miracle.

Now a certain seven-year-old girl, a novice named Cīrā, who had attained Fourfold Knowledge, [211] saluted the Teacher and said, "Reverend Sir, I will perform a miracle." "What miracle will you perform, Cīrā?” “Reverend Sir, I will fetch hither Mount Sineru, and the range of mountains that encircles the earth, and Himālaya likewise, and I will set them up in a row; and then I will soar like a wild-goose up and over the tops of these mountains without so much as touching them and return hither. When the populace see me, they will ask, ‘Who is that?’ and the answer will be, ‘That is the female novice Cīrā.’ The heretics will say, ‘It is a mere seven-year-old novice who possesses this supernatural power; what must the supernatural power of a Buddha be like?’ So saying, they will flee away without so much as waiting to see you.” (The same words are to be understood here as occurred in the previous answers.) To her likewise did the Exalted One reply, “I know your supernatural power,” and declined her offer to perform the miracle.

Now a certain novice named Cunda, who, although he had attained Fourfold Knowledge and Freedom from the Depravities, yet was only seven years old, saluted the Teacher and said, “Exalted One, I will perform a miracle.” “What miracle will you perform?” asked the Teacher. Cunda replied, “Reverend Sir, I will take upon my shoulder a great rose-apple tree, which is the emblem of the Land of the Rose-apple, and I will wave it back and forth, and I will bring fragments of rose-apple and give to this company to eat thereof, and I will also bring flowers of the coral tree.” Then the nun Uppalavaṇṇā saluted the Teacher and said, “Reverend Sir, I will perform a miracle.” “What miracle will you perform?” asked the Teacher. “Reverend Sir,” replied Uppalavaṇṇā, “Before the eyes of a multitude extended twelve leagues on all sides, I will surround myself with a retinue thirty-six leagues round about, and I will take the form of a Universal Monarch and will come to you and will pay obeisance to you.” [212] Said the Teacher, “I know your supernatural power,” and declined her offer to perform the miracle.

Then the Elder Moggallāna the Great saluted the Exalted One and said, “Reverend Sir, I will perform a miracle.” “What miracle will you perform?” asked the Teacher. “Reverend Sir, I will put Mount Sineru, king of mountains, between my teeth and crunch it like a kidney-bean.” “What else will you do?” “I will roll up this earth like a mat and thrust it between my fingers.” “What else will you do?” “I will cause the earth to revolve like a potter’s wheel and I will give the multitude the essence of earth to eat.” “What else will you do?” “I will place the earth in my left hand, and I will remove all these living beings to another continent.” “What else will

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

the lower part of his body proceeded flames of fire and from the upper part of his body a stream of water. From the front part of his body proceeded flames of fire, and from the back part of his body a stream of water. From the back part of his body proceeded flames of fire, and from the front part of his body a stream of water.

Flames of fire and streams of water proceeded from his right and left eyes, from his right and left ears, from his right and left nostrils, from his right and left shoulders, from his right and left hands, from his right and left sides, from his right and left feet, from the tips of his fingers and from the roots of his fingers; from every pore of his body proceeded forth flames of fire, and from every pore of his body proceeded forth a stream of water. Six-colored were they: blue and yellow and red and white and pink and brilliant. The Exalted One walked, and a counterpart of him stood or sat or lay down; . . . his counterpart lay down and the Exalted One walked or stood or sat. This is the tradition regarding the Twin Miracle performed by the Exalted One.

(This miracle, therefore, the Teacher performed as he walked up and down the jeweled walk. By means of a trance induced by meditation on the element of fire, flames of fire proceeded from the upper part of his body; and by means of a trance induced by meditation on the element of water, [215] a stream of water proceeded from the lower part of his body. The words "From the lower part of his body" and "From the upper part of his body" are used to show that from the same part of the body from which a stream of water proceeded, from that part also flames of fire proceeded; and that from the same part of the body from which flames of fire proceeded, from that part also a stream of water also proceeded. The same principle of interpretation applies also to the following expressions. Now the flames of fire were not mingled with the stream of water, nor was the stream of water mingled with the flames of fire. Both the flames of fire and the stream of water shot upwards as far as the World of Brahmā, and streamed thence to the rim of the Cakkavāla. With reference to the "six colors," rays of six colors, like molten gold running out of crucibles, or like an ooze of king's yellow coming out of a tube, shot upwards from the interior of one Cakkavāla to the World of Brahmā, whence they streamed back to the rim of the Cakkavāla. Thus each Cakkavāla was arched with rays of light shaped like a Λ -shaped rafter, and the House of Enlightenment was suffused with an even light.)

On that day the Teacher walked up and down performing his Twin Miracle, and as he did so, he preached the Law to the multitude from time to time, not wearying them with uninterrupted discourse, but giving them sufficient opportunity to refresh themselves from time to time. Thereupon the multitude sent up shouts of applause. Hearing the shouts of applause which proceeded from the multitude, the Teacher straightway looked into the hearts of the great multitude, and in sixteen ways perceived the disposition of mind of each one. So quick is the movement of the mind of the Buddhas, [216] that in case any person took pleasure in any portion of the Law or in any miracle, the Buddha preached the Law and performed a miracle in accordance with the temper and disposition of every such person. As he thus preached the Law and performed miracles, a great multitude of living beings obtained clear comprehension of the Law.

Since the Teacher saw in that vast throng none other than himself who understood his mind and could ask him questions, he put forth his supernatural power and created a double; the double then asked him questions and the Teacher answered them. While the Exalted One walked up and down, his double occupied himself otherwise; while his double walked up and down, the Exalted One occupied himself otherwise. (It is in order to make this point clear that the statement, "His double walked," and so forth, is introduced.) Seeing the Teacher perform his miracle thus and hearing him preach the Law, two hundred millions of living beings in that vast throng obtained Comprehension of the Law.

2 e. The Ascent of the Buddha to the World of the Thirty-three

As the Teacher performed his miracle, he considered within himself, "Where have Buddhas of the past kept residence after performing this miracle?" Straightway he became aware of the following, "It has been their invariable custom to enter upon residence in the World of the Thirty-three and to expound the Abhidhamma Piṭaka to their mother." Thereupon he lifted up his right foot and set it down on the summit of Yugandhara, and then he lifted up his left foot and set it down on the summit of Sineru, and thus in three strides, setting his foot on the earth but twice, he spanned sixty-eight hundred thousand leagues. One must not conclude, "When the Teacher took those strides he lengthened his stride;" the true explanation is that when he lifted up his foot the mountains huddled under his feet, and [217] when he strode forward they rose again and stood in their proper places.

Sakka saw the Teacher and thought to himself, "The Teacher will doubtless keep residence during the coming season of the rains on the Yellowstone Throne; thus will he be of service to deities without number. But if the Teacher enters upon residence here, the other deities will not be able to lift even a hand. This Yellowstone Throne is sixty leagues long and fifty leagues broad; and even if the Teacher seats himself therein, it will appear as if empty." The Teacher perceiving the thought in his mind, threw his own mantle over the stone throne, completely covering it. Thought Sakka, "The robe he threw quite covers the throne, to be sure, but he himself will appear small indeed when he seats himself thereon. The Teacher, perceiving the thought in his mind, enfolded the Yellowstone Throne in a fold of his robe, even as a big monk clad in refuse-rag-robcs might cover a low stool with their skirts; and when he had so done, seated himself upon the Yellowstone Throne. At that moment the multitude looked for the Teacher, but saw him not; it was as though the moon had just set. Thereupon the multitude said,

Has he gone to Cittakūṭa or to Kelāsa or to Yugandhara?

We may not see the Supremely Enlightened One, Prince of the World, mightiest of men. [218]

As the multitude repeated this Stanza, they wept and lamented. Others said to themselves, "The Teacher delights in solitude, and embarrassed at having performed such a miracle before such a throng, has departed to another kingdom or country. Shall we not see him again henceforth?" And weeping and lamenting, they pronounced the following Stanza,

He that delights in solitude, he that is steadfast will not come back again to this world.
We may not see the Supremely Exalted, the Prince of the World, the mightiest of men.

Thereupon they asked Moggallāna the Great, "Where has the Teacher gone, Reverend Sir?" Although Moggallāna the Great himself knew perfectly well where the Teacher had gone, he thought to himself, "Of others also let the wondrous powers become known," and therefore answered, "Ask the Elder Anuruddha." So they asked the Elder Anuruddha, "Reverend Sir, where has the Teacher gone?" The Elder Anuruddha replied, "He has entered upon residence in the World of the Thirty-three, seated upon the Yellowstone Throne; he went thither to expound the Abhidhamma Piṭaka to his mother."

“When will he return, Reverend Sir?” “He will spend these three months expounding the Abhidhamma, and he will return on the day of the Terminal Festival.” Thereupon the multitude exclaimed, “We will not go away until we see the Teacher.” So then and there they pitched camp, with the sky alone for their covering. Although the multitude was so great, naught that issued from their bodies was noticeable on the ground; for the earth opened and received all, so that the surface of the earth was everywhere sweet and clean.

Before the Teacher ascended, he addressed Moggallāna the Great, “Moggallāna, do you expound the Law to this company and Culla Anāthapiṇḍika will provide food.” Accordingly, during those three months, Culla Anāthapiṇḍika provided that company with water and rice-porridge [219] and hard food, and likewise with betel and garlands and perfumes and ornaments. Moggallāna the Great expounded the Law to them and answered the questions of all who had come to see a miracle. When the Teacher had entered upon residence in the World of the Thirty-three, and had seated himself upon the Yellowstone Throne that he might expound the Abhidhamma to his mother, the deities of ten thousand worlds surrounded him and waited upon him. Therefore is it said,

In the World of the Thirty-three, when the Buddha, most exalted of beings,
Dwelt at the foot of the Coral-tree, seated on the Yellowstone Throne,

The deities of the Ten Worlds assembled together and waited upon
The Supremely Enlightened, dwelling at the highest point of the heavens.

In comparison with the Supremely Enlightened, there was no deity who shone;
The Supremely Enlightened alone shone, surpassing all of the other deities.

As he sat there, outshining with the splendor of his own body all the other deities, his mother approached from the Palace of the Tusita gods and sat down on his right hand, the deity Indaka likewise approached and sat down on his right hand, and Añkura on his left hand.¹ When those powerful deities assembled, Añkura withdrew and sat down twelve leagues distant, while Indaka sat down on the right hand of the Teacher. The Teacher surveyed them both, and desiring to make known how great is the fruit that accrues in his dispensation, to him who bestows offerings on those that are worthy of offerings, said to Añkura, “After a long time, although for ten thousand years you made a row of fire-places twelve leagues in length ¹ Cf. Peta-Vatthu Commentary, ii. 9: 136–140. See also Dhammapada Commentary, xxiv. 12.

[220] and gave abundant offerings, upon coming to my assembly, you have sat down farthest removed of all, twelve leagues distant. What can be the cause of this?”

Moreover it is said:

The Supremely Enlightened looked upon Añkura and Indaka;
Declaring who is worthy of offerings, he uttered these words,

You gave abundant offerings, Añkura. Yet, after a long interval,
You sit afar off. Come to me.

The sound of these words reached the surface of the earth, and all that multitude heard it. When the Teacher had thus spoken,

Roused by the Righteous Teacher, Añkura spoke thus,
What good have these gifts done me? Is emptiness bestowed by him that is worthy of offerings?

This Yakkha Indaka gave but slender gifts;
Yet he outshines us, even as the moon outshines the hosts of stars.

Now when Añkura had thus spoken, the Teacher addressed Indaka, “Indaka, you sit on my right hand; why do you sit there and depart not?” Indaka replied, “Reverend Sir, like a farmer who has sown a little seed in a good field, I have received the blessing of him that is worthy of offerings.” And making clear who are worthy of offerings and who are not, Indaka said,

Even as seed, however abundant, sown on a barren soil,
Does not produce much fruit, and does not delight the farmer,

So also alms, however abundant, bestowed upon evil men,
Do not produce much fruit, and do not delight the giver. [221]

But even as seed, however little in amount, sown in a good field,
Produces fruit after a heavy shower, and delights the farmer,

So also, when done for the virtuous and righteous and holy,
A good deed, however slight, yields abundant fruit.

But what was Indaka’s former deed? The story goes that on a certain occasion, when the Elder Anuruddha entered the village to receive alms, he gave him a spoonful of his own food. This was Indaka’s work of merit. Although Añkura had for ten thousand years made a row of fire-places twelve leagues long, and had given abundant alms, Indaka’s deed received the greater reward. Therefore spoke Indaka as he did. Thereupon the Teacher said, “Añkura, one should use discrimination in giving alms. In that way alms, like seed sown on good soil, yield abundant fruit." But you did not do so. Hence your alms did not become fruitful. To make the matter clearer he said,

Alms should be given with discrimination; so given, it yields abundant fruit.
They that give alms with discrimination go to heaven.

The giving of alms with discrimination is extolled by the Happy One.
Alms given to living beings here in the world who are worthy of offerings,
Yield abundant fruit, like seeds sown on good ground.

Having thus spoken, he expounded the Law further by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

356. Weeds ruin a field, lust ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from lust yield abundant fruit.

357. Weeds ruin a field, hatred ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from hatred yield abundant fruit.

358. Weeds ruin a field, delusion ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from delusion yield abundant fruit.

359. Weeds ruin a field, inordinate desire ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from inordinate desire yield abundant fruit. [222]

Then, seated in the midst of the assembly of the gods, for the sake of his mother, the Teacher began the recitation of the Abhidhamma Piṭaka, beginning with the words, "Those things which are good, those things which are evil, those things which are neither good nor evil." And thus, for the space of three months without interruption, he recited the Abhidhamma Piṭaka. Now when it was time for him to go on his round for alms, he would create a double and say to him, "Preach the Law until I return." Then he would himself go to the Himālaya, and after chewing a betel tooth-stick and rinsing his mouth in the waters of Lake Anotatta, he would bring alms from Uttarakuru, and seating himself in the garden of a man of wealth, he would eat his meal.

The Elder Sāriputta went to the World of the Tusita gods and waited upon the Teacher. When the Teacher had finished his meal, he said, "Sāriputta, to-day I have recited the Law so-and-so-far; therefore do you recite it to the five hundred monks who depend upon you;" and he taught it to the Elder. We are told that through faith in the Twin Miracle five hundred youths of respectable families [223] became monks under the Elder, and that it was with reference to these youths that the Teacher thus spoke. When he had thus spoken, he returned to the World of the Gods and preached the Law in person beginning at the place where the counterpart of the Buddha had left off. The Elder returned to the world of men and preached the Law to those monks; while the Teacher yet remained in the World of the Gods, they mastered Seven Books.

We are told that in the dispensation of the Buddha Kassapa they were little bats. On a certain occasion, as they hung over a mountain-cave, they overheard two monks reciting the Abhidhamma as they walked up and down their walk and straightway fell in love with their voices. As for the expressions, "These aggregates of being, these elements of being," they did not know what they meant; but solely because they had fallen in love with their voices, when they passed from that state of existence they were reborn in the World of the Gods. There, for the space of an interval between two Buddhas, they enjoyed celestial glory; afterwards they were reborn in Sāvatti in the households of families of distinction. Receiving faith in the Twin Miracle, they became monks under the Elder and were the first to obtain mastery over the Seven Books. The Teacher continued for the space of three months in the same way to recite the Abhidhamma Piṭaka. At the conclusion of his recitation of the Law eight hundred thousands of millions of deities obtained clear comprehension of the Law, and Mahā Māyā was established in the Fruit of Conversion. [224] .

2 f. The Descent of the Buddha and attendant deities, Devorohana

That multitude thirty-six leagues in extent, knowing that the Terminal Festival would occur seven days later, approached the Elder Moggallāna the Great and said to him, "Reverend Sir, is it not proper for us to know on what day the Teacher will descend? We will not depart hence until we see the Teacher." Venerable Moggallāna the Great replied, "Very well, brethren," and diving into the earth right there, he went to the foot of Mount Sineru. Then he willed: "Let the multitude behold me as I climb." Then he climbed the side of Mount Sineru, his form appearing like the thread of a yellow blanket pulled through a jewel. The multitude watched him and cried out from time to time, "He has climbed one league! He has climbed two leagues!"

When the Elder had climbed the mountain, he prostrated himself before the Teacher, uplifting the Teacher's feet with the crown of

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

and set foot on earth at the gate of the city Saṃkassa. Elder Sāriputta approached the Teacher and paid obeisance to him. And because he had never before seen the Teacher descend with such majesty, the glorious majesty of a Buddha, he spoke thus,

Never have I seen, nor has any one ever heard,
The Teacher speaking so sweetly, now returned from Tusita with his following.

With this Stanza and with many others did Elder Sāriputta express his joy. Having so done, he said to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, to-day all gods and men hold you dear and seek after you.” The Teacher replied, “Sāriputta, with such virtues as these are the Buddhas endowed, and therefore are they dear to gods and men alike.” So saying, he expounded the Law by pronouncing the following Stanza,

181. They that are devoted to meditation, they that are steadfast,
They that delight in the tranquillity of retirement from the world,
They that are enlightened and mindful, they are beloved even of the gods. [227]

It is the invariable practice of all the Buddhas, we are told, after they have performed the Twin Miracle, to spend the season of the rains in the World of the Gods, and to descend to the world of men at the gate of the city Saṃkassa. And there, marking the spot where they set their right foot on the ground, there is a permanent shrine. There the Teacher took his stand and asked a question within the comprehension of those who had not yet attained the Fruit of Conversion. Those who had not yet attained the Fruit of Conversion readily answered the question which was within their comprehension, but were unable to answer the question adapted to the comprehension of those who had attained the Fruit of Conversion. In like manner, those who had attained the Fruit of Conversion were unable to answer the question adapted to the comprehension of those who had attained the Fruit of the Second Path. Similarly the rest of the Chief Disciples were unable to answer the question within the range of Moggallāna the Great, Moggallāna the Great was unable to answer the question within the range of the Elder Sāriputta, [228] and the Elder Sāriputta was unable to answer the question within the range of the Buddha.

The Teacher looked first to the east, and then to each of the other cardinal points. It was one great court. At the four cardinal points and at the four intermediate points stood gods and men, to the World of Brahmā above; and below, Nāgas and Supaṇṇas stood on the ground in an attitude of reverent supplication. Said they, “Reverend

Sir, there is no one here who can answer this question; consider it no further.” Said the Teacher, “Sāriputta is perplexed to hear this question adapted to the comprehension of a Buddha,

Of all that have weighed the Law and attained Arahatsip,
Of all that are yet under training, of all that have not yet attained the Fruit of Conversion;

As to their walk and conversation, do thou, who knowest,
Being asked, tell me, Venerable Sir.”

Thought the Teacher, “Although there is no doubt in Sāriputta’s mind regarding the meaning of the question, since he understands that I am asking a question relating to the walk and conversation of those who are yet under training and to those who have finished their training and attained Arahatsip, yet there is doubt in his mind regarding my purpose in asking the question, and he is considering within himself, ‘Of the aggregates of being, the elements of being, and the organs and objects of sense, by which one of these can I best grasp the intent of the Teacher?’ Unless I give him a clue, he will not be able to answer the question; I will therefore give him a clue.” Therefore he said, “Sāriputta, do you understand the expression, ‘This being?’” Then the following thought occurred to him, “So soon as Sāriputta grasps the thought that is in my mind, [229] he will answer the question in terms of the aggregates of being.” No sooner had the Teacher given him a clue, than the question became clear in a hundred ways and a thousand ways; with the assistance of the clue which the Teacher had given him, the Elder straightway answered the question.

We are told that with the sole exception of the Supremely Enlightened One there was no other able to answer the question which the Teacher asked the Elder Sāriputta. Therefore, we are told, the Elder took his stand before the Teacher and said with a shout of triumph, “Reverend Sir, I can count the number of drops of rain that have fallen into the great ocean during all the rains which have fallen during an entire cycle of time, and likewise the number of drops of rain that have fallen upon the ground, and likewise the number of drops of rain which have fallen upon the mountains, and I can set down an exact reckoning thereof.” The Teacher replied, “Sāriputta, I know your power of reckoning.” Indeed there is nothing with which may be compared the learning of the Venerable Elder Sāriputta. That is why the Elder said,

The sands along the Ganges waste away; the waters in the ocean waste away;
The particles of dust of the earth waste away; the number thereof I can reckon by my knowledge.

(The meaning of the foregoing Stanza is as follows, “If, Reverend Sir, All-wise Protector of the World, after answering this question, I should answer hundreds and thousands of other questions, and for every question I answered I should lay aside a single grain of sand, or a single drop of water or a single particle of dust, among all the grains of sand and drops of water and particles of dust that lie along the Ganges, never missing one, the grains of sand and the drops of water and the particles of dust which lie along the Ganges would sooner fail than my ability to answer questions.”)

Thus did a monk so richly endowed, [230] although at first he saw neither the beginning nor the end of the question asked him, which lay within the range of the Buddha’s knowledge, by taking advantage of the clue given him by the Teacher, answer the question. When the monks heard of this, they began the following discussion, “The Commander of the Faith, the Elder Sāriputta, answered all by himself a question which no one else in the whole world was able to answer.” The Teacher, hearing the discussion, said, “This is not the first time that the Elder Sāriputta has answered a question which the whole world was unable to answer; he did the same thing in a previous state of existence.” And when he had thus spoken, he related a Story of the Past: ¹

Though a thousand and more who lack wisdom, should assemble together and prattle for a hundred years,

Yet were a single man of wisdom superior, if he understand that which another speaks.

And he related this Jātaka in detail.

XIV. 3. THE KING OF THE DRAGONS AND HIS DAUGHTER ²

Difficult is it to obtain birth as a human being. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence under the seven Sirīsaka-trees near Benāres with reference to Erakapatta, King of the Dragons.

We are told that in the dispensation of the Buddha Kassapa, Erakapatta was a young monk. One day he embarked in a boat on the Ganges [231] and set out on a voyage. Passing a jungle of Eraka-trees, he grasped a leaf. Although the boat was moving rapidly, he did not let go, and the result was that the leaf was entirely broken off. "A mere trifle!" thought he. Although for twenty thousand years he performed meditations in the forest without confessing his fault, yet, when he came to die, he felt as though an Eraka-leaf had seized him by the neck. Desiring to confess his fault, but seeing no other monk, he was filled with remorse and cried out, "My virtue is impaired!" Thus he died. Having passed out of that state of existence, he was reborn as a dragon-king, the measure of his body being that of a dug-out canoe. At the moment of rebirth he surveyed his person, and was filled with remorse as he thought to himself, "After performing meditations for so long a time, I have been reborn in a causeless state, in a feeding-place for frogs."

¹ Jātaka 99: i. 406–407.

² Text: N iii. 230–236.

After a time a daughter was born to him. Thereupon, lying on the surface of the water in the middle of the Ganges, he raised his great hood, placed his daughter therein, and caused her to dance and sing. This was the thought in his mind, "In this way, in case a Buddha arises in the world, I shall come to know of it. In case anyone sings a reply to my song, I will give him my daughter and the power and wealth of a dragon-king to boot." So every fortnight, on Fast-day, he placed his daughter in his hood. And his daughter, poised there, danced, and sang this song,

What manner of ruler is a king?

What manner of king is under the dominion of passion?

How may he free himself from the bondage of passion?

Why is he called a simpleton? [232]

All over the Land of the Rose-apple men said to themselves, "Let us win the dragon-maiden." Accordingly, to the best of their ability, they made up replies and sang them, but the daughter of the dragon-king rejected them all. Every fortnight she danced and sang within her father's hood. Thus passed an interval between two Buddhas.

After the Teacher had appeared in the world, as he surveyed the world at dawn one morning, he perceived that among others the dragon-king Erakapatta and the Brahman youth Uttara had entered the Net of his Knowledge. Thereupon he considered within himself, "What now will come to pass?" And straightway he became aware of the following, "To-day is the day when the dragon-king Erakapatta will place his daughter within his hood and make her dance. This Brahman youth Uttara will learn a song which I will teach him, will attain the Fruit of Conversion, and keeping the song in mind, will approach the king of the dragons. When the king of the dragons hears that song, he will know that the Buddha has appeared in the world, and he will then come to me. When he has come to me, I will pronounce a Stanza in the midst of a great multitude, and at the conclusion of the Stanza eighty-four thousand living beings will attain Comprehension of the Law.”

Now there were seven Sirīsaka-trees not far from Benāres, and the Teacher straightway went and took his seat under one of those trees. The inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple took a response to the song and assembled. Not far off, the Teacher saw the Brahman youth Uttara walking, and said to him, “Uttara!” “What is it, Reverend Sir?” “Just come here.” When Uttara had come back, saluted the Teacher, and taken his seat, the Teacher said to him, “Where are you going?” “I am going to the place where the daughter of the dragon-king Erakapatta sings her song.” “But do you know a reply to the song?” “Yes, Reverend Sir; I know a reply to her song.” “Just recite it to me.” Uttara recited to the Teacher a reply to the song, which he had made up. Thereupon the Teacher said, “That is no reply. I will give you a reply. [233] Will you take it and go to her with it?” “Yes, Reverend Sir, I will.” Then said the Teacher to him, “Uttara, when the maiden sings her song, you are to sing the following song in reply,

He who is master of the Six Doors of the Body is a king.
He who takes delight in them has passion for his master.
He who does not take delight in them is free from passion.
He who does take delight in them is called a simpleton.”

The Teacher having given him this reply, said to him, “Uttara, when you have sung this song, she will sing the following reply to your song,

By what is a simpleton borne along? How does a wise man shake himself free?
How does he attain Nibbāna? Answer me this question.”

“Then you are to sing the following reply,

By the flood of passions is the simpleton borne along; by devotion the wise man shakes them off.

He that has freed himself from all the Attachments is said to have attained Nibbāna.” [234]

Uttara memorized this reply, and as he did so, attained the Fruit of Conversion. Having attained the Fruit of Conversion, he took that Stanza and set out. "Ho!" cried he, "I have brought with me a reply to her song; make way for me." The crowd was so dense that as he walked, he hit with his feet the knees of the crowd.

The daughter of the king of the dragons stood within the hood of her father, and standing there, danced and sang the song, "What manner of ruler is a king?" Uttara sang the reply, "He who is master of the Six Doors of the Body is a king." The maiden in turn sang, "By what is a simpleton borne along?" Then Uttara sang the following Stanza in reply, "By the flood of passions is the simpleton borne along."

When the king of the dragons heard those words, he knew that the Buddha had appeared in the world. And he said to himself, "I have not heard a song like that during the whole of an interval between two Buddhas." "A Buddha has indeed appeared in the world!" thought he. And his heart was filled with joy. With his tail he lashed the surface of the water, whereupon great waves arose, washing away both banks, and on this side and on that, for a distance of an usabha, men were plunged into the water. The king of the dragons then raised his hood, placed those men therein, and set them on dry land. Then he approached Uttara and asked him, "Master, where is the Teacher?" "He is sitting under this tree, great king." "Come, master, let us go," said the king of the dragons, and set out with Uttara. A great multitude joined Uttara and followed him.

The king of the dragons went to where the Teacher was, and after making his way in among the six-colored rays of light, saluted the Teacher and stood on one side weeping. Then said the Teacher to him, "What does this mean, great king?" "Reverend Sir, I was once the disciple of a Buddha like you, [235] and for twenty thousand years performed meditations. But the meditations of twenty thousand years were not sufficient to secure my salvation. Just because I broke off a tiny Eraka-leaf, I was reborn in a causeless state, in the condition of one who must go about on his belly. During a whole interval between two Buddhas I attained neither human estate, nor the privilege of hearing the Law, nor the privilege of seeing a Buddha like you." Hearing his words, the Teacher replied, "Great king, human estate is indeed difficult to attain; it is likewise difficult to gain the privilege of listening to the Law; so also is the rise of a Buddha difficult. For this latter is brought about with toil and trouble."

So saying, he preached the Law, pronouncing the following Stanza,

182. Difficult is it to obtain birth as a human being; difficult is the life of mortals;
Difficult is the hearing of the Good Law; difficult is the rise of the Buddhas.

At the conclusion of the lesson eighty-four thousand living beings obtained Comprehension of the Law.

(The king of the dragons would have attained the Fruit of Conversion on that day, had it not been for his animal nature. [236] He recovered the power of going about in human form only after attaining Freedom from Weariness in the five conditions in which dragons which have received the bodies of dragons are weary: namely, those called attainment of rebirth, shedding of skin, sinking into untroubled slumber, mating with those of their own kind, and vanishing from existence.)

XIV. 4. HOW DID THE SEVEN BUDDHAS KEEP FAST-DAY? ¹

The shunning of all evil. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a question asked by Elder Ānanda.

We are told that as the Elder sat in his day-quarters, he thought to himself, “The Teacher has described the mothers and fathers of the Seven Buddhas, their length of life, the tree under which they got Enlightenment, their company of disciples, their Chief Disciples, and their principal supporter. All this the Teacher has described. But he has said nothing about their mode of observance of Fast-day. Was their mode of observance of Fast-day the same as now, or was it different?” Accordingly he approached the Teacher and asked him about the matter.

Now in the case of these Buddhas, while there was a difference of time, there was no difference in the Stanzas they employed. The Supremely Enlightened Vipassī kept Fast-day every seven years, but the admonition he gave in one day sufficed for seven years. Sikhī and Vessabhū kept Fast-day every six years; Kakusandha and Koṇāgamana, every year; Kassapa, Possessor of the Ten Forces, kept Fast-day every six months, but the admonition of the latter sufficed for six months. For this reason the Teacher, after explaining to the Elder this difference of time, [237] explained that their observance of Fast-day was the same in every case. “These are the very Stanzas they employed in giving admonition,” said he, quoting the following Stanzas,

¹ Text: N iii. 236–238.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

the latter conducted him to the Teacher and explained what was the matter with him.

The Teacher asked him, “Is the report true that you are discontented?” “Yes, Reverend Sir,” he replied. Again the Teacher asked him, “Why have you acted thus? Have you any means of livelihood?” “Yes, Reverend Sir.” “How great is your wealth?” “A hundred pieces of money, Reverend Sir.” “Very well; just fetch a few potsherds hither; we will count them and find out whether or not you have sufficient means of livelihood.” The discontented monk brought the potsherds. Then the Teacher said to him, “Now then, set aside fifty for food and drink, twenty-four for two bullocks, and an equal number for seed, for a two-bullock-plow, for a spade, and for a razor-adze.” The result of the count proved that the hundred pieces of money would be insufficient.

Then said the Teacher to him, “Monk, the pieces of money which you possess are but few in number. How can you hope to satisfy your desire with so few as these? In times past lived men who exercised sway as Universal Monarchs, [240] men who by a mere waving of the arms were able to cause a rain of jewels to fall, covering the ground for twelve leagues waist-deep with jewels; these men ruled as kings until Thirty-six Sakkas had died; and, although exercising sovereignty over the gods for so long, died, when they did die, without having fulfilled their desires.” When the Teacher had thus spoken, the monks requested him to relate this Story of the Past. The Teacher accordingly related the Mandhātā Jātaka in detail.¹

As far as the moon and the sun revolve, and the resplendent quarters are bright,
All are slaves of Mandhātā, as many living beings as are on the earth.

Then he pronounced the two Stanzas which immediately follow the preceding Stanza,

186. Not with a rain of coins can the lusts be satisfied;
The wise man understands that the lusts afford but temporary satisfaction, and bring suffering in their train.
187. Even in celestial pleasures the wise man takes no delight;
The disciple of the Supremely Enlightened takes delight only in the destruction of Craving.

¹ Jātaka 258: ii. 310–314. Cf. Divyāvadāna, xvii: 210 ff.; and Tibetan Tales, i: 1–20.

XIV. 6. THE MONK AND THE DRAGON¹

To many a refuge men go. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana, sitting on a pile of sand; and it was with reference to Aggidatta, house-priest of the King of Kosala. [241]

It appears that Aggidatta was the house-priest of Mahā Kosala. When Mahā Kosala died, his son, King Pasenadi Kosala, out of respect for Aggidatta, since he had been his father's house-priest, reappointed him to the same post. Whenever Aggidatta came to wait upon the king, the king would go forth to meet him and would provide him with a seat of equal dignity with himself and say to him, "Teacher, pray sit here." After a time, however, Aggidatta thought to himself, "This king pays me very great deference, but it is impossible to remain in the good graces of kings for good and all. Life in a king's household is very pleasant for one who is of equal age with the king. But I am an old man and therefore had best become a monk." Accordingly Aggidatta asked permission of the king to become a monk, caused a drum to be beaten throughout the city, spent all of his wealth by way of alms in the course of a week, and [242] retired from the world, becoming a monk of an heretical order. Ten thousand men followed his example and became monks.

Aggidatta with his monks took up his residence on the frontier of the country of the Aṅgas and Magadhas and the country of the Kurus. Having so done, he addressed his monks as follows, "Friends, in case any one of you should be troubled with unlawful thoughts, whether lustful, malevolent, or cruel, let each one of you so troubled fill a jar with sand from the river and empty the sand in this place." "Very well," said the monks, promising to do so. So whenever they were troubled by unlawful thoughts, whether lustful, malevolent, or cruel, they did as he had commanded them to do. In the course of time there arose a great heap of sand, and Ahicchatta king of the dragons took possession of it. The dwellers in Aṅga and Magadha and the dwellers in the kingdom of the Kurus, month by month, brought rich offerings in honor of those monks and presented them to them. Now Aggidatta admonished them as follows, "So surely as you seek refuge in a mountain, so surely as you seek refuge in a forest, so surely as you seek refuge in a grove, so surely as you seek refuge in a tree, even so surely will you obtain release from all suffering.” With this admonition did Aggidatta admonish his disciples.

¹ Cf. Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 313-314. Text: N iii. 241-247.

At this time the Future Buddha, after going forth on the Great Retirement, and after attaining Complete Enlightenment, took up his residence at Jetavana near Sāvatti. Surveying the world at dawn he perceived that the Brahman Aggidatta, together with his disciples, had entered the Net of his Knowledge. So he considered within himself, “Do all these living beings possess the faculties requisite for Arahatsip?” Perceiving that they possessed the requisite faculties, he said in the evening to Elder Moggallāna the Great, “Moggallāna, do you observe that the Brahman Aggidatta is urging upon the multitude a course of action other than the right one? Go and admonish them.” “Reverend Sir, these monks are very numerous, and if I go alone, I fear that they will prove to be untractable; [243] but if you also go, they will be tractable.” “Moggallāna, I will also go, but you go ahead.”

As the Elder proceeded, he thought to himself, “These monks are both powerful and numerous. If I say a word to them when they are all gathered together, they will all rise against me in troops.” Therefore by his own supernatural power he caused great drops of rain to fall. When those great drops of rain fell, the monks arose, one after another, and each entered his own bower of leaves and grass. The Elder went and stood at the door of Aggidatta’s leaf-hut and called out, “Aggidatta!” When Aggidatta heard the sound of the Elder’s voice, he thought to himself, “There is no one in this world who is able to address me by name; who can it be that thus addresses me by name?” And in the stubbornness of pride, he replied, “Who is that?” “It is I, Brahman.” “What have you to say?” “Show me a place here where I can spend this one night.” “There is no place for you to stay here; here is but a single hut of leaves and grass for a single monk.” “Aggidatta, men go to the abode of men, cattle to the abode of cattle, and monks to the abode of monks; do not so; give me a lodging.” “Are you a monk?” “Yes, I am a monk.” “If you are a monk, where is your khāri-vessel? what monastic utensils have you?” “I have utensils, but since it is inconvenient to carry them about from place to place, I procure them within and then go my way.” “So you intend to procure them within and then go your way!” said Aggidatta angrily to the Elder. The Elder said to him, “Go away, Aggidatta, do not be angry; show me a place where I can spend the night." "There is no lodging here." "Well, who is it that lives on that pile of sand?" "A certain dragon-king." "Give the pile of sand to me." "I cannot give you the pile of sand; that would be a grievous affront to him." [244] "Never mind, give it to me." "Very well; you alone seem to know."

The Elder started towards the pile of sand. When the dragon-king saw him approaching, he thought to himself, "Yonder monk approaches hither. Doubtless he does not know that I am here. I will spit smoke at him and kill him." The Elder thought to himself, "This dragon-king doubtless thinks, 'I alone am able to spit smoke; others are not able to do this.'" So the Elder spit smoke himself. Puffs of smoke arose from the bodies of both and ascended to the World of Brahmā. The puffs of smoke gave the Elder no trouble at all, but troubled the dragon-king sorely. The dragon-king, unable to stand the blasts of smoke, burst into flames. The Elder applied himself to meditation on the element of fire and entered into a state of trance. Thereupon he burst into flames which ascended to the World of Brahmā. His whole body looked as if it had been set on fire with torches. The company of sages looked on and thought to themselves, "The dragon-king is burning the monk; the good monk has indeed lost his life by not listening to our words." When the Elder had overmastered the dragon-king and made him quit his misdoing, he seated himself on the pile of sand. Thereupon the dragon-king surrounded the pile of sand with good things to eat, and creating a hood as large as the interior of a peak-house, held it over the Elder's head.

Early in the morning the company of sages thought to themselves, "We will find out whether the monk is dead or not." So they went to where the Elder was, and when they saw him sitting on the pile of sand, they did reverence to him and praised him and said, "Monk, you must have been greatly plagued by the dragon-king." "Do you not see him standing there with his hood raised over my head?" Then said the sages, "What a wonderful thing the monk did [245] in conquering so powerful a dragon-king!" And they stood in a circle about the Elder.

At that moment the Teacher drew near. The Elder, seeing the Teacher, arose and saluted him. Said the sages to the Elder, "Is this man greater than you?" The Elder replied, "This is the Exalted One, the Teacher; I am only his disciple." The Teacher seated himself on the summit of the pile of sand. The company of sages said to each other, "If such is the supernatural power of a mere disciple, what must the supernatural power of this man be like?” And extending their clasped hands in an attitude of reverent salutation, they bestowed praise on the Teacher. The Teacher addressed Aggidatta and said, “Aggidatta, in giving admonition to your disciples and supporters, how do you admonish them?” Aggidatta replied, “I admonish them thus, ‘Seek refuge in this mountain, seek refuge in this forest, or grove, or tree. For he who seeks refuge in these obtains release from all suffering.’” Said the Teacher, “No indeed, Aggidatta, he who seeks refuge in these does not obtain release from suffering. But he who seeks refuge in the Buddha, the Law, and the Order, he obtains release from the whole round of suffering.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas, 188. To many a refuge men go, to mountains and to forests,

To shrines and trees and groves, when terrified with fear.

189. Such is no sure refuge, such is no final refuge;
Not by resorting to such a refuge does a man obtain release from all suffering.

190. Whoever seeks refuge in the Buddha, the Law, and the Order, Whoever, with clear understanding, beholds the Four Noble Truths, —

191. Suffering, the Origin of Suffering, the Escape from Suffering,
And the Noble Eightfold Path of Escape from Suffering,— [246]

192. To this sure refuge, to this supreme refuge,
By resorting to this refuge, he obtains release from all suffering. [247]

At the conclusion of the lesson all those sages attained Arahatsip, together with the Supernatural Faculties. Thereupon they saluted the Teacher and asked to be admitted to the Order. The Teacher stretched out his hand from under his robe and said, “Come, monks! Lead the Holy Life.” That very instant they were furnished with the Eight Requisites and became as it were Elders of a hundred years’ standing.

Now this was the day when all the dwellers in Añga and in Magadha and in the country of the Kurus were accustomed to come with rich offerings. When, therefore, they approached with their offerings, and saw that all those sages had become monks, they thought to themselves, “Is our Brahman Aggidatta great, or is the monk Gotama great?” And because the Teacher had but just arrived, they concluded, “Aggidatta alone is great.” The Teacher surveyed their thoughts and said, “Aggidatta, destroy the doubt that exists in the minds of your disciples.” Aggidatta replied, “That is the very thing I desire most to do.” So by supernatural power he rose seven times in the air, and descending to the ground again and again, he saluted the Teacher and said, "Reverend Sir, the Exalted One is my Teacher and I am his disciple." Thus did Aggidatta speak, declaring himself the disciple of the Exalted One.

XIV. 7. WHENCE COME MEN OF NOBLE BIRTH? ¹

It is not easy to find. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a question asked by the Elder Ānanda.

One day as the Elder sat in his day-quarters, he thought to himself, [248] "The Teacher has told us whence come well-bred elephants, horses, and bullocks. 'Noble elephants,' said he, 'are bred from the stock of Chaddanta or of Uposatha;² noble chargers from the stock of Valāhaka, king of horses; and noble bullocks are raised in the Dekkan.' But men of noble birth, — now whence pray come they?" He went to the Teacher, saluted him, and asked him about the matter. Said the Teacher, "Ānanda, your 'men of noble birth', — it is not everywhere that they are born. But in the Middle Country, three hundred leagues long in a straight line and nine hundred in a circuit, — there they are born. But when they are born, it is not in any family soever that they are born, but only in a family here and there of some Khattiya or Brahman noble." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

193. It is not easy to find a man of noble birth; it is not everywhere that such a man is born;

Wherever is born a man that is steadfast, the family prospers wherein he is born.

XIV. 8. WHAT IS THE PLEASANTEST THING IN THE WORLD? ³

Pleasant is the rise of the Buddhas. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a company of monks. [249]

For one day five hundred monks sitting in the Hall of State began the following discussion, "Brethren, what is the pleasantest thing in this world?" Some said, "There is nothing that can compare with the pleasure of ruling.” Others said, “There is nothing that can compare with the pleasures of love.” Still others said, “There is no pleasure that can compare with the pleasure of eating rice, meat, and so on.” The Teacher approached the place where they were sitting and asked them, “Monks, what are you sitting here now talking about?” When they told him, he replied, “Monks, what are you saying? All these pleasures which you are discussing belong to the Round of Suffering. On the other hand, the rise of a Buddha in this world, the hearing of the Law, and peace and harmony in the Order, these and these alone are pleasant.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 247-249.

² See Jātaka 479: iv. 232.

³ Text: N iii. 249-250.

194. Pleasant is the rise of the Buddhas, pleasant is the preaching of the True Religion, Pleasant is peace and unity in the Order; the devotion of those who live in harmony is pleasant.

XIV. 9. HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE ¹

He that renders honor to whom honor is due. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was making a journey with reference to the Buddha Kassapa's golden shrine. [250]

One day the Tathāgata departed from Sāvatti, accompanied by a large company of monks and set out for Benāres. On his way thither he came to a certain shrine near the village Todeyya. There the Happy One sat down, sent forth Ānanda, Treasurer of the Faith, and bade him summon a Brahman who was tilling the soil near by. [251] When the Brahman came, he omitted to pay reverence to the Tathāgata, but paid reverence only to the shrine. Having so done, he stood there before the Teacher. Said the Happy One, “How do you regard this place, Brahman?” The Brahman replied, “This shrine has come down to us through generations, and that is why I reverence it, Sir Gotama.” Thereupon the Happy One praised him, saying, “In reverencing this place you have done well, Brahman.”

When the monks heard this, they entertained misgivings and said, “For what reason did the Exalted One bestow this praise?” So in order to dispel their doubt, the Tathāgata recited the Ghaṭikāra Suttanta in the Majjhima Nikāya.² Then by the supernatural power of his magic, he created in the air a mountain of gold, a double, as it

¹ Text: N iii. 250–253.

² Majjhima, 81: ii. 45–54.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

BOOK XV. HAPPINESS, SUKHA VAGGA

XV. 1. A QUARREL AMONG BRETHREN¹

Oh, happily let us live! This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence among the Sākiyas with reference to the cessation of a quarrel among kinsmen. [254]

The story goes that the Sākiyas and the Koliyas caused the waters of the river Rohinī to be confined by a single dam between the city of Kapilavatthu and the city of Koliya, and cultivated the fields on both sides of the river. Now in the month Jetṭhamūla the crops began to droop, whereupon the laborers employed by the residents of both cities assembled. Said the residents of the city of Koliya, “If this water is diverted to both sides of the river, there will not be enough both for you and for us too. But our crops will ripen with a single watering. Therefore let us have the water.”

The Sākiyas replied, “After you have filled your storehouses, we shall not have the heart to take ruddy gold and emeralds and black pennies, and, baskets and sacks in our hands, go from house to house seeking favors at your hands. Our crops also will ripen with a single watering. [255] Therefore let us have this water.” “We will not give it to you.” “Neither will we give it to you.” Talk waxed bitter, until finally one arose and struck another a blow. The other returned the blow and a general fight ensued, the combatants making matters worse by aspersions on the origin of the two royal families.

Said the laborers employed by the Koliyas, “You who live in the city of Kapilavatthu, take your children and go where you belong. Are we likely to suffer harm from the elephants and horses and shields and weapons of those who, like dogs and jackals, have cohabited with their own sisters?" The laborers employed by the Sākiyas replied, "You lepers, take your children and go where you belong. Are we likely to suffer harm from the elephants and horses and shields and weapons of destitute outcasts who have lived in jujube-trees like animals?" Both parties of laborers went and reported the quarrel to the ministers who had charge of the work, and the ministers reported the matter to the royal households. Thereupon the Sākiyas came forth armed for battle and cried out, "We will show what strength and power belong to those who have cohabited with their sisters." Likewise the Koliyas came forth armed for battle and cried out, "We will show what strength and power belong to those who dwell in jujube-trees."

¹ This story is a brief outline of the Introduction to Jātaka 536: v. 412–416. Dh. cm., iii. 254⁶–255¹⁹ is almost word for word the same as Jātaka, v. 412¹⁶–413¹⁰, and Dh. cm., iii. 256¹⁻⁹ is almost word for word the same as Jātaka, v. 414⁴⁻¹¹. The Dhammapada Commentary version then concludes very briefly, saying nothing about the relation of Jātakas by the Buddha. Cf. Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 317–320. Text: N iii. 254–257.

As the Teacher surveyed the world at dawn and beheld his kinsmen, he thought to himself, "If I refrain from going to them, these men will destroy each other. It is clearly my duty to go to them." Accordingly he flew through the air quite alone to the spot where his kinsmen were gathered together, and seated himself cross-legged in the air over the middle of the river Rohinī. [256] When the Teacher's kinsmen saw the Teacher, they threw away their weapons and did reverence to him. Said the Teacher to his kinsmen, "What is all this quarrel about, great king?" "We do not know, Reverend Sir." "Who then would be likely to know?" "The commander-in-chief of the army would be likely to know." The commander-in-chief of the army said, "The viceroy would be likely to know." Thus the Teacher put the question first to one and then to another, asking the slave-laborers last of all. The slave-laborers replied, "The quarrel is about water, Reverend Sir."

Then the Teacher asked the king, "How much is water worth, great king?" "Very little, Reverend Sir." "How much are Khattiyas worth, great king?" "Khattiyas are beyond price, Reverend Sir." "It is not fitting that because of a little water you should destroy Khattiyas who are beyond price." They were silent. Then the Teacher addressed them and said, "Great kings, why do you act in this manner? Were I not here present to-day, you would set flowing a river of blood. You have acted in a most unbecoming manner. You live in enmity, indulging in the five kinds of hatred. I live free from hatred. You live afflicted with the sickness of the evil passions. I live free from disease. You live in eager pursuit of the five kinds of sensual pleasure. I live free from the eager pursuit of aught." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

197. Oh, happily let us live! free from hatred, among those who hate;
Among men who hate, let us live free from hatred.
198. Oh, happily let us live! free from disease, among those who are afflicted with disease;
Among men who are afflicted with disease, let us live free from disease.
199. Oh, happily let us live! free from longing, among those who are possessed with longing;
Among those who are possessed with longing, let us live free from longing.

XV. 2. MĀRA POSSESSES VILLAGERS ¹

Oh, happily let us live! This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence in the Brahman village Pañcasālā with reference to Māra. [257]

For one day the Teacher perceived that five hundred maidens possessed the faculties requisite for attaining the Fruit of Conversion, and therefore went and took up his residence near this village. Now on a certain festival day those maidens went to the river and bathed, and having so done, adorned themselves with rich apparel and jewels and set out in the direction of the village. Accordingly the Teacher also entered that village and went about the village receiving alms. Now Māra took possession of the bodies of all the inhabitants of that village, [258] with the result that the Teacher received not so much as a spoonful of boiled rice. As the Teacher departed from that village with bowl clean as it had been washed, Māra took his stand at the gate of that village and said to him, “Monk, you received no alms?” “Embodiment of evil, why have you so wrought that I should receive no alms?” “Very well, Reverend Sir, enter the village again.” This thought, we are told, was in Māra’s mind, “If he enters the village again, I will take possession of the bodies of all the villagers and will cause them to clap their hands before his face, laugh in his face, and make all manner of fun of him.”

At that moment those maidens reached the gate of the village, and seeing the Teacher, saluted him and stood respectfully on one side. Then said Māra to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, seeing that you received not a morsel of food, you must be oppressed with the pangs of hunger.” The Teacher replied, “Embodiment of evil, though to-day we received naught, yet shall we spend the day in the bliss of joy, like Great Brahmā in the Heaven of the Bright Gods.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ This story is derived from Saṃyutta, iv. 2. 8: i. 113–114. Cf. E. Windisch, Māra und Buddha, pp. 102–104. Text: N iii. 257–259.

200. Oh, happily let us live! we who possess naught;
Let us live on the food of joy, like the Bright Gods.

XV. 3. DEFEAT OF THE KING OF KOSALA ¹

Victory produces hatred. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the defeat of the king of Kosala. [259]

The story goes that the king of Kosala fought against his nephew Ajātasattu near the village Kāsika and suffered defeat three times. As he returned from defeat the third time, he thought to himself, “Since I have not been able to subdue this milk-faced youth, what is the use of my living any longer?” So he refused to eat and took to his bed. The news of what he had done, spread throughout city and monastery. The monks reported the matter to the Teacher, saying, “Reverend Sir, report has it that the king, who thrice suffered defeat near the village Kāsika and has just now returned from defeat, has refused to eat and has taken to his bed, saying, ‘Since I have not been able to defeat this milk-faced youth, what is the use of my living any longer?’” When the Teacher heard this report, he said, “Monks, by winning a victory, a man produces hatred; and he that is defeated is afflicted with suffering.” So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza,

201. Victory produces hatred; he that is defeated is afflicted with suffering;
He that has renounced both victory and defeat lives in tranquillity and happiness.

XV. 4. “LOOK NOT ON A WOMAN TO LUST AFTER HER” ²

There is no fire like the fire of lust. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain maiden of respectable family. [260]

The story goes that the mother and father of this maiden arranged a marriage for her and invited the Teacher to be present on the wedding-day. So the Teacher, accompanied by the Congregation of Monks, went thither and sat down. The bride passed to and fro, straining water for the Congregation of Monks and performing the other duties. As the bride passed to and fro, the husband stood and gazed at her. As he gazed at her, he was overpowered by desire and lust arose within him. Overcome by nescience, he ministered neither to the Buddha nor to the Eighty Chief Elders, but made up his mind, "I will stretch forth my arms and embrace that woman."

¹ Text: N iii. 259–260.

² Text: N iii. 260–261.

The Teacher perceived what was passing through his mind and so wrought that he no longer saw that woman. Seeing her no longer, he stood and gazed at the Teacher. As he stood there gazing at the Teacher, the Teacher said to him, "Youth, there is no fire like the fire of lust. [261] There is no sin like the sin of hatred. There is no suffering like the suffering involved in keeping up the Aggregates of Being. There is no happiness like the happiness of Nibbāna." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

202. There is no fire like the fire of lust;
 There is no sin like the sin of hatred;
 There are no sufferings like the sufferings of existence;
 There is no happiness like Supreme Tranquillity.

At the conclusion of the lesson the maiden and the youth were established in the Fruit of Conversion. At that moment the Exalted One permitted them to see each other once more.

XV. 5. THE BUDDHA FEEDS THE HUNGRY¹

Hunger. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Ālavī with reference to a certain lay disciple.

For one day, as the Teacher seated in the Perfumed Chamber at Jetavana [262] surveyed the world at dawn, he beheld a certain poor man at Ālavī. Perceiving that he possessed the faculties requisite for attaining the Fruit of Conversion, he surrounded himself with a company of five hundred monks and went to Ālavī. The inhabitants of Ālavī straightway invited the Teacher to be their guest. That poor man also heard that the Teacher had arrived and made up his mind to go and hear the Teacher preach the Law. But that very day an ox of his strayed off. So he considered within himself, "Shall I seek that ox, or shall I go and hear the Law?" And he came to the following conclusion, "I will first seek that ox and then go and hear the Law." Accordingly, early in the morning, he set out to seek his ox.

¹ Text: N iii. 261-264.

The residents of Ālavi provided seats for the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, served them with food, and after the meal took the Teacher's bowl, that he might pronounce the words of thanksgiving. Said the Teacher, "He for whose sake I came hither a journey of thirty leagues has gone into the forest to seek his ox which was lost. Not until he returns, will I preach the Law." And he held his peace.

While it was still day, that poor man found his ox and straightway drove the ox back to the herd. Then he thought to himself, "Even if I can do nothing else, I will at least pay my respects to the Teacher." Accordingly, although he was oppressed with the pangs of hunger, he decided not to go home, but went quickly to the Teacher, and having paid obeisance to the Teacher, sat down respectfully on one side. When the poor man came and stood before the Teacher, the Teacher said to the steward of the alms, "Is there any food remaining over and above to the Congregation of Monks?" "Reverend Sir, the food has not been touched." "Well then, serve this poor man with food." So when the steward had provided that poor man with a seat in a place indicated by the Teacher, he served him dutifully with rice-porridge and other food, both hard and soft. When the poor man had eaten his meal, he rinsed his mouth.

(We are told that with this single exception there is no other instance on record in the Three Piṭakas [263] of the Tathāgata's having thus inquired about the supply of food.) As soon as the poor man's physical sufferings had been relieved, his mind became tranquil. Then the Teacher preached the Law in orderly sequence, expounding one after another the Four Noble Truths. At the conclusion of the lesson, the poor man was established in the Fruit of Conversion. Then the Teacher pronounced the words of thanksgiving, and having so done, arose from his seat and departed. The multitude accompanied him a little way and then turned back.

The monks who accompanied the Teacher were highly indignant and said, "Just consider, brethren, what the Teacher did. Nothing of the sort ever happened before. But to-day, seeing a certain poor man, the Teacher inquired about the supply of food and directed that food to be given to another." The Teacher turned around, stopped, and said, "Monks, what are you saying?" When he heard what they were saying, he said to them, "It is even so, monks. When I came hither a journey of thirty leagues, a long and difficult journey, my sole reason for coming hither was the fact that I saw that this lay disciple possessed the faculties requisite for the attainment of the Fruit of Conversion. Early in the morning, oppressed with the pangs of hunger, this man went to the forest and spent the day in the forest seeking his ox which was lost. Therefore I thought to myself, 'If I preach the Law to this man while he is suffering from the pangs of hunger, he will not be able to comprehend it.' Therefore was it that I did what I did. Monks, there is no affliction like the affliction of hunger." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

203. Hunger is the greatest of afflictions; the Aggregates of Being are the principal source of suffering;
If a man thoroughly understand this, he has attained Nibbāna, Supreme Happiness.

XV. 6. ON MODERATION IN EATING ¹

Health is the greatest acquisition. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to King Pasenadi Kosala. [264]

For at a certain period of his life King Pasenadi Kosala used to eat boiled rice cooked by the bucketful, and sauce and curry in proportion. One day after he had eaten his breakfast, unable to shake off the drowsiness occasioned by over-eating, he went to see the Teacher and paced back and forth before him with a very weary look. Overcome with a desire to sleep, but not daring to lie down and stretch himself out, he sat down on one side. Thereupon the Teacher said to him, "Did you come, great king, before you were well rested?" "Oh no, Reverend Sir; but I always suffer greatly after eating a meal." Then said the Teacher to him, [265] "Great king, over-eating brings just such suffering in its train." So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza,

325. If a man gives way to indolence, eats overmuch,
Spends his time in sleep, and lies and rolls about
Like a great hog fed on grain,
Such a simpleton will enter the womb again and again.

¹ This story is almost word for word the same as Samyutta, iii. 2. 3: i. 81-82. Cf. Story xxiii. 4. Text: N iii. 264-267.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

est wealth, confidence is the best of relatives. But there is no happiness that can be compared with Nibbāna.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

204. Health is the greatest acquisition, contentment is the greatest wealth, Confidence is the best of relatives, Nibbāna is the greatest happiness.

XV. 7. BY RIGHTEOUSNESS MEN HONOR THE BUDDHA ¹

He who has tasted the sweetness of solitude. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Vesāli with reference to a certain monk. [267]

For when the Teacher said, “Monks, four months hence I shall pass into Nibbāna,” seven hundred monks of his retinue were overwhelmed with fear, the Arahats experienced religious exaltation, while those who had not yet attained the Fruit of Conversion were unable to restrain their tears. [268] The monks gathered in little groups and went about consulting each other and asking, “What are we to do?”

Now a certain monk named Elder Tissa thought to himself, “If it be true that at the expiration of four months the Teacher will pass into Nibbāna, inasmuch as I am not yet free from the evil passions, it behooves me to win Arahatship while the Teacher yet remains alive.” Accordingly he adopted the Four Postures and kept residence by himself, never associating with the other monks and never talking or conversing with any one. The monks said to him, “Brother Tissa, why do you act in this manner?” Tissa, however, paid no attention to what they said.

The monks therefore reported the matter to the Teacher, saying, “Reverend Sir, Elder Tissa has no affection for you.” The Teacher caused Tissa to be summoned and asked him, “Tissa, why do you act in this manner?” When Tissa told the motive that actuated him, the Teacher applauded his conduct, saying, “Well done, Tissa.” Then said the Teacher to the monks, “Monks, he only that is like Tissa has real affection for me. For though men honor me with perfumes and garlands, they honor me not. But they that practice the Higher and the Lower Law, they alone truly honor me.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Cf. Stories xii. 10 and xxv. 4. Text: N iii. 267-269.

205. He who has tasted the sweetness of solitude and the sweetness of tranquillity, Such an one is free from fear and free from sin, for he drinks the sweetness of the joy of the Law.

XV. 8. SAKKA MINISTERS TO THE BUDDHA ¹

It is a good thing to look upon the Noble. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Beluva village with reference to Sakka. [269]

For when the Tathāgata's Aggregate of Life was at an end and he was suffering from an attack of dysentery, Sakka king of gods became aware of it and thought to himself, "It is my duty to go to the Teacher and to minister to him in his sickness." Accordingly he laid aside his own body, three-quarters of a league in height, approached the Teacher, saluted him, and with his own hands rubbed the Teacher's feet. The Teacher said to him, "Who is that?" "It is I, Reverend Sir, Sakka." "Why did you come here?" "To minister to you in your sickness, Reverend Sir." "Sakka, to the gods the smell of men, even at a distance of a hundred leagues, is like that of carrion tied to the throat; [270] depart hence, for I have monks who will wait upon me in my sickness." "Reverend Sir, at a distance of eighty-four thousand leagues I smelt the fragrance of your goodness, and therefore came I hither; I alone will minister to you in your sickness." Sakka permitted no other so much as to touch with his hand the vessel which contained the excrement of the Teacher's body, but himself carried the vessel out on his own head. Moreover he carried it out without the slightest contraction of the muscles of his mouth, acting as though he were bearing about a vessel filled with perfumes. Thus did Sakka minister to the Teacher and departed only when the Teacher felt more comfortable.

The monks began a discussion, saying, "Oh, how great must be the affection of Sakka for the Teacher! To think that Sakka should lay aside such heavenly glory as is his, to wait upon the Teacher in his sickness! To think that he should carry out on his head the vessel containing the excrement of the Teacher's body, as though he were removing a vessel filled with perfumes, without the slightest contraction of the muscles of his mouth!" Hearing their talk, the Teacher said, "What say you, monks? It is not at all strange that Sakka king of gods should cherish warm affection for me. For because of me this Sakka king of gods laid aside the form of Old Sakka, obtained the Fruit of Conversion, and took upon himself the form of Young Sakka. For once, when he came to me terrified with the fear of death, preceded by the celestial musician Pañcasikha,¹ and sat down in Indasāla Cave in the midst of the company of the gods, I dispelled his suffering by saying to him,

¹ Text: N iii. 269-272.

Vāsava, ask me whatever question you desire in your heart to ask;
I will answer whatever question you ask me.

“Having dispelled his suffering, I preached the Law to him. At the conclusion of the discourse fourteen crores of living beings obtained Comprehension of the Law, and Sakka himself, even as he sat there, obtained the Fruit of Conversion and became Young Sakka. Thus I have been a mighty helper to him, and it is not at all strange that he should cherish warm affection for me. For, monks, [271] it is a pleasant thing to look upon the Noble, and it is likewise a pleasant thing to live with them in the same place; but to have aught to do with simpletons brings suffering.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

206. It is a good thing to look upon the Noble, and to live with them is ever pleasant;
It would be pleasant, might one never look upon a simpleton at all.

207. For he who walks in the company of simpletons suffers a long time;
Living with simpletons, as with an enemy, always brings suffering;
Pleasant is it to live with the steadfast, even as is a meeting of kinsfolk.

Therefore,

208. One should follow the steadfast, the wise, the learned, the patient, the dutiful, the Noble;
One should follow so good and intelligent a man, as the moon follows the path of the stars.

¹ See Digha, 21: ii. 263–289.

BOOK XVI. OBJECTS OF AFFECTION, PIYA VAGGA

XVI. 1. MOTHER AND FATHER AND SON ¹

He who abandons himself to the distractions of this world. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to three religious. [273]

The story goes that in a certain household at Sāvatti there was an only son, who was the darling and delight of his mother and father. One day some monks were invited to take a meal at the house, and when they had finished, they recited the words of thanksgiving. As the youth listened to the words of the Law, he was seized with a desire to become a monk, and straightway asked leave of his mother and father. They refused to permit him to do so. Thereupon the following thought occurred to him, "When my mother and father are not looking, I will leave the house and become a monk."

Now whenever the father left the house, he committed the son to the care of his mother, saying, "Pray keep him safe and sound;" and whenever the mother left the house, she committed the son to the care of the father. One day, after the father had left the house, the mother said to herself, "I will indeed keep my son safe and sound." So she braced one foot against one of the door-posts and the other foot against the other door-post, and sitting thus on the ground, began to spin her thread. The youth thought to himself, "I will outwit her and escape." So he said to his mother, "Dear mother, just remove your foot a little; I wish to attend to nature's needs." She drew back her foot and he went out. He went to the monastery as fast as he could, and approaching the monks, said, "Receive me into the Order, Reverend Sirs." [274] The monks complied with his request and admitted him to the Order.

When his father returned to the house, he asked the mother, "Where is my son?" "Husband, he was here but a moment ago." "Where can my son be?" thought the father, looking about. Seeing him nowhere, he came to the conclusion, "He must have gone to the monastery." So the father went to the monastery, and seeing his son garbed in the robes of a monk, wept and lamented and said, "Dear son, why do you destroy me?" But after a moment he thought to himself, "Now that my son has become a monk, why should I live the life of a layman any longer?" So of his own accord, he also asked the monks to receive him into the Order, and then and there retired from the world and became a monk.

¹ Text: N iii. 273-276.

The mother of the youth thought to herself, "Why are my son and my husband tarrying so long?" Looking all about, she suddenly thought, "Undoubtedly they have gone to the monastery and become monks." So she went to the monastery and seeing both her son and her husband wearing the robes of monks, thought to herself, "Since both my son and my husband have become monks, what further use have I for the house-life?" And of her own accord, she went to the community of nuns and retired from the world.

But even after mother and father and son had retired from the world and adopted the religious life, they were unable to remain apart; whether in the monastery or in the convent of the nuns, they would sit down by themselves and spend the day chatting together. The monks and nuns were repelled by their conduct, and one day the monks told the Teacher what was going on. The Teacher sent for them and asked them, "Is the report true that you are doing this and that?" They replied in the affirmative. Then said the Teacher, "Why do you do so? This is not the proper way for monks and nuns to conduct themselves." "But, Reverend Sir, it is impossible for us to live apart." "From the time of retirement from the world, such conduct is highly improper; it is painful both to be deprived of the sight of those who are dear, and to be obliged to look upon that which is not dear; for this reason, whether persons or material things be involved, one should take no account either of what is dear or of what is not dear." So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanzas,

209. He who abandons himself to the distractions of this world,
 He who fails to apply himself to his religious duties,
 He who abandons the real purpose of life, he who grasps at what is dear to him,
 Such a man will come to envy him who applies himself to his religious duties. [275]

210. Never abide in the company of those who are dear or of those who are not dear;
 It is painful, both to be deprived of the sight of those who are dear, and to be obliged to look upon those who are not dear.

211. Therefore hold nothing dear: for the loss of what is dear is an evil.
 Fetters exist not for those to whom naught is either dear or not dear.

XVI. 2. THE BUDDHA COMFORTS THE AFFLICTED ¹

From thought of one that is dear. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain layman. [276]

The story goes that this layman, on losing his son, was so overwhelmed with grief that he went every day to the burning-ground and wept, being unable to restrain his grief. As the Teacher surveyed the world at dawn, he saw that the layman had the faculties requisite for Conversion. So when he came back from his alms-round, he took one attendant monk and went to the layman's door. When the layman heard that the Teacher had come to his house, he thought to himself, "He must wish to exchange the usual compliments of health and civility with me." So he invited the Teacher into his house, provided him with a seat in the house-court, and when the Teacher had taken his seat, approached him, saluted him, and sat down respectfully on one side.

At once the Teacher asked him, "Layman, why are you sad?" "I have lost my son; therefore am I sad," replied the layman. Said the Teacher, "Grieve not, layman. That which is called death is not confined to one place [277] or to one person, but is common to all creatures who are born into the world. Not one of the Elements of Being is permanent. Therefore one should not give himself up to sorrow, but should rather take a reasonable view of death, even as it is said, 'Mortality has suffered mortality, dissolution has suffered dissolution.'

"For wise men of old sorrowed not over the death of a son, but applied themselves diligently to meditation upon death, saying to themselves, 'Mortality has suffered mortality, dissolution has suffered dissolution.'" The layman asked the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, who were they that did this? When was it that they did this? Pray tell me about it." So to make the matter clear, the Teacher related the following Story of the Past: ²

Even as a snake casts off his old skin, so a man casts off his own body and goes to the other world;

Even so fares his body, deprived of the capacity of enjoyment, when he is dead and gone.

The while his body burns, he hears not the lamentation of his kinsmen;

Therefore is it that I grieve not for him; he is gone whither it was his lot to go.

¹ This story is similar to the Introduction to Jātaka 354: iii. 162-168. Text: N iii. 276-278.

² Jātaka 354: 162-168.

When the Teacher had related in detail this Uraga Jātaka, found in the Fifth Book, he continued as follows, “In times past wise men did not do as you are doing on the death of a son. You have abandoned your wonted occupations, have deprived yourself of food, and spend your time in lamentation. Wise men of old did not so. On the contrary, they applied themselves diligently to meditation upon death, would not allow themselves to grieve, ate their food as usual, and attended to their wonted occupations. [278] Therefore grieve not at the thought that your dear son is dead. For whether sorrow or fear arises, it arises solely because of one that is dear.” So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza,

212. From thought of one that is dear, arises sorrow;
 From thought of one that is dear, arises fear.
 He that is free from thought of dear ones neither sorrows nor fears.

XVI. 3. THE BUDDHA COMFORTS THE AFFLICTED ¹

From affection springs grief. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the female lay disciple Visākhā.

The story goes that Visākhā used to permit her son's daughter, a maiden named Dattā, to minister to the monks in her house when she was absent. After a time Dattā died. Visākhā attended to the deposition of her body, and then, unable to control her grief, went sad and sorrowful to the Teacher, and having saluted him, sat down respectfully on one side. Said the Teacher to Visākhā, “Why is it, Visākhā, that you sit here sad and sorrowful, with tears in your eyes, weeping and wailing?” [279] Visākhā then explained the matter to the Teacher, saying, “Reverend Sir, the girl was very dear to me and she was faithful and true; I shall not see the like of her again.”

“But, Visākhā, how many inhabitants are there in Sāvatti?” “I have heard you say, Reverend Sir, that there are seventy millions.” “But suppose all these persons were as dear to you as was Dattā; would you like to have it so?” “Yes, Reverend Sir.” “But how many persons die every day in Sāvatti?” “A great many, Reverend Sir.” “In that case it is certain that you would lack time to satisfy your grief; you would go about both by night and by day, doing nothing but wail.” “Certainly, Reverend Sir; I quite understand.” Then ¹ This story is derived from Udāna, viii. 8: 91–92. Text: N iii. 278–279.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XVI. 5. THE GOLDEN MAIDEN ¹

From love springs grief. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Anitthigandha Kumāra. [281]

Anitthigandha, we are told, passed from the World of Brahmā and was reborn in Sāvatti in a family possessed of great wealth. From the day of his birth he refused to go near a woman; if a woman took him in her arms, he would scream; when they suckled him, they concealed the breast from him with a pillow. When he reached manhood, his mother and father said to him, "Son, we wish to arrange a marriage for you." The youth replied, "I have no use for a woman." Time and again they asked him, and time and again he refused. Finally he caused five hundred goldsmiths to be brought before him, ordered a thousand nikkhas of ruddy gold to be given to them, and caused them to make a solid image of beaten gold in the form of a woman of surpassing beauty.

Once more his mother and father said to him, "Son, if you refuse to marry, the family line will not continue; let us bring you home a maiden to wife." The youth replied, "Very well, if you will bring me such a maiden as that, I will do your bidding." So saying, he pointed to the image of gold. So his mother and father summoned several noted Brahmans and sent them forth, saying, "Our son possesses great merit; there must certainly be a maiden who wrought works of merit with him. Take this image of gold with you, go abroad, and bring back with you a maiden of equal beauty." "Agreed," said the Brahmans, and they traveled from place to place until they came to the city Sāgala in the kingdom of Madda.

Now there lived in this city a certain maiden about sixteen years old, and she was exceedingly beautiful. Her mother and father had provided apartments for her on the topmost floor of a seven-storied palace. The Brahmans [282] set the golden image down by the side of the road leading to the bathing-place, and themselves sat down on one side, thinking, "If a maiden as beautiful as this image lives here, people will say on seeing it, 'This image is as beautiful as the daughter of the So-and-so family.'"

¹ The materials for this story appear to have been drawn mainly from Jātakas 263: ii. 328; 507: iv. 469; 328: iii. 93-94; and 531: v. 282-285. Cf. also Thera-Gāthā Commentary, cclxi; Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Mahā Kassapa; and Tibetan Tales, ix: 186-205. All of these stories, except Jātakas 263 and 507, turn on the motif of the Golden Maiden. Text: N iii. 281-284.

Now the nurse of that maiden bathed her charge, and having so done, herself also desiring to bathe, set out for the bathing-place on the river. When she saw that image, she thought to herself, "That is my own daughter!" And she said to the image, "You are a miscreant! Only a moment ago, I bathed you and left the house, but you got here before me." Forthwith she struck the image with her hand. Perceiving that what she had struck was hard and solid, she said to herself, "I thought this was my own daughter; pray what can this be?" Then the Brahmans asked her, "Woman, does your daughter look like this image?" "What does this image amount to, compared with my daughter?" "Well then, show us your daughter."

The nurse accompanied the Brahmans to the house and told her mistress and master. The mistress and master of the household exchanged friendly greetings with the Brahmans, and then caused their daughter to come down and stand on the lower floor of the palace beside the golden image. So great was the beauty of the maiden, that the image no longer seemed beautiful. The Brahmans gave them the image, took the maiden, and went and informed the mother and father of Anitthigandha Kumāra. Delighted at heart, they said to the Brahmans, "Go fetch this maiden hither with all speed." So saying, they sent them forth with rich offerings.

When Anitthigandha Kumāra heard the report that a maiden had been found yet more beautiful than the golden image, desire arose within him at the mere hearing of the report. Said he, "Let them fetch the maiden hither with all speed." [283] The maiden entered a carriage, but so delicate was she that as she was being conveyed along the road, the jolting of the carriage gave her cramps, and then and there she died. The youth asked repeatedly, "Has she arrived? Has she arrived?" So great, in fact, was the ardor he betrayed by his questions, that they did not immediately tell him what had happened, but put him off from day to day. After a few days, however, they told him what had really happened. Thereupon he exclaimed, "Alas, to think that I should have failed to meet so beautiful a woman!" Profound melancholy came over him, and he was overwhelmed with grief and pain as by a mountain.

The Teacher, seeing that he was ripe for Conversion, stopped at the door of his house on his round for alms. His mother and father invited the Teacher to enter and showed him every attention. At the conclusion of the meal the Teacher asked, “Where is Anitthigandha Kumāra?” “He refuses to eat, Reverend Sir, and keeps to his room.” “Summon him hither.” Anitthigandha came, saluted the Teacher, and sat down on one side. Said the Teacher, “Youth, you seem to be very sad.” “Yes, Reverend Sir,” replied the youth; “a most beautiful woman just died upon the road, and the news of her death has made me very sad; so great is my sadness that even my food does not agree with me.” Then said the Teacher to him, “But, youth, do you know the cause of the intense sorrow which has afflicted you?” “No, Reverend Sir, I do not.” “Youth, because of love, intense sorrow has come upon you; sorrow and fear both spring from love.” So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza, 215. From love springs sorrow; from love springs fear.

He that is free from love neither sorrows nor fears. [284]

At the conclusion of the lesson Anitthigandha Kumāra was established in the Fruit of Conversion.

XVI. 6. SET NOT YOUR HEART ON WORLDLY POSSESSIONS ¹

From desire springs sorrow. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain Brahman.

The story goes that this Brahman, who was a holder of false views, went one day to the bank of the river to clear his field. The Teacher, seeing that he was ripe for Conversion, went to the place where he was. The Brahman, although he saw the Teacher, paid him no mark of respect, but remained silent. The Teacher was the first to speak and said, “Brahman, what are you doing?” “Clearing my field, Sir Gotama.” The Teacher said no more and went his way. On the following day the Brahman went to plow his field. The Teacher went to him and asked, “Brahman, what are you doing?” “Plowing my field, Sir Gotama.” The Teacher, hearing his reply, went his way. On several days in succession the Teacher went to the Brahman and asked the same question. Receiving the answers, “Sir Gotama, I am planting my field, I am weeding my field, I am guarding my field,” the Teacher went his way. One day the Brahman said to the Teacher,

¹ Text: N iii. 284–286.

“Sir Gotama, you have been coming here ever since I cleared my field. If my crop turns out well, I will divide with you. I will not myself eat without giving to you. Henceforth you shall be my partner.”

As time went on, his crop prospered. [285] One day he said to himself, “My crop has prospered; to-morrow I will set the reapers to work.” So he made ready for the reaping. But a severe rain-storm raged that night and beat down all his crops; the field looked as if it had been cut clean. The Teacher, however, knew from the very first that his crop would not prosper. Early in the morning the Brahman said to himself, “I will go look at my field.” But when he reached the field and saw that it had been swept clean, he thought with deep grief, “The monk Gotama has visited this field from the day when I first cleared it, and I have said to him, ‘If this crop of mine prospers, I will divide with you. I will not myself eat without giving to you. Henceforth you shall be my partner.’ But the desire of my heart has not been fulfilled.” And he refused to eat and took to his bed.

Now the Teacher stopped at the door of his house. When the Brahman heard that the Teacher had arrived, he said, “Bring my partner in and give him a seat here.” His servants did so. When the Teacher had taken his seat, he asked, “Where is the Brahman?” “He is lying in his room.” “Summon him.” When the Brahman had come in response to the summons and had seated himself on one side, the Teacher said to him, “What is the matter, Brahman?” “Sir Gotama, you have visited me from the day when I first cleared my field, and I have said to you, ‘If my crop prospers, I will divide with you.’ But the desire of my heart has not been fulfilled. Therefore sorrow has come upon me, and my food no longer agrees with me.” Then said the Teacher to him, “But, Brahman, do you know from what cause sorrow has come upon you?” “No, Sir Gotama, that know I not. But you know.” The Teacher replied, “Yes, Brahman. Whether sorrow or fear arises, it arises solely from desire.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [286]

216. From desire springs sorrow; from desire springs fear.
He that is free from desire neither sorrows nor fears.

XVI. 7. KASSAPA WINS A BASKET OF CAKES ¹

If a man possess the power to discern between good and evil. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana, as he walked by the way, with reference to fifty youths.

For one day, on the occasion of a certain festival, as the Teacher, accompanied by the Eighty Chief Elders and a retinue of five hundred monks, was entering Rājagaha for alms, he saw five hundred youths with baskets of cakes on their shoulders come out of the city on their way to a pleasure garden. When they saw the Teacher, they saluted him and continued on their way without so much as saying to a single monk, "Have a cake." When they had gone, the Teacher said to the monks, "Monks, should you not like to eat some cakes?" "Reverend Sir, where are any cakes?" "Do you not see those youths passing by with baskets of cakes on their shoulders?" "Reverend Sir, such youths as they never give cakes to anybody." "Monks, although these youths have not invited you or me to share their cakes, yet a monk, the owner of the cakes, follows in the rear. You must eat some cakes before you go on." [287] Now the Buddhas cherish no sentiments of ill-will or hatred towards any man; therefore the Teacher spoke thus. And having thus spoken, he went with the Congregation of Monks, and sat down at the foot of a certain tree in the shade.

When the youths saw Elder Kassapa the Great following in the rear, they immediately took a liking to him. In fact their bodies were pervaded with a thrill of pleasure at seeing him. Forthwith they set down their baskets, saluted the Elder with the Five Rests, held up the cakes, baskets and all, and saluting the Elder, said to him, "Have some cakes, Reverend Sir." In reply the Elder said to them, "Here is the Teacher with the Congregation of Monks, sitting at the foot of a tree. Take your offerings and go and divide with the Congregation of Monks." "Very well, Reverend Sir," replied the youths. So turning around, they went back with the Elder, gave the Elder cakes, stood on one side watching him, and at the end of the repast, gave him water. The monks were offended and said, "These youths have shown favoritism in giving alms; they never asked either the Supremely Enlightened One or the Chief Elders to accept alms, but when they saw the Elder Kassapa the Great, they took their baskets and went and offered him cakes." The Teacher, hearing their words, said, "Monks, a monk like my son Kassapa the Great is dear to gods and men alike; such a man they delight to honor with the Four Requisites." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 286-288.

217. If a man possess the power to discern between good and evil,
If he abide steadfast in the Law, if he speak the truth,
If he perform faithfully his own duties, he will be held dear by the multitude.

XVI. 8. THE ELDER WHO HAD ATTAINED THE FRUIT OF THE THIRD PATH¹

If a man desire the Ineffable. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain Elder who had attained the Fruit of the Third Path. [288]

For one day the co-residents of this Elder asked him the following question, "But, Reverend Sir, have you attained Specific Attainment?" The Elder thought, "Even laymen are able to attain the Fruit of the Third Path; so soon as I attain Arahatsip, I will talk with them." Therefore, because of embarrassment, he said nothing. Shortly afterwards he died and was reborn in the Heaven of the Pure Abode. Thereupon his fellow-monks wept and lamented. And going to the Teacher, they saluted him and sat down on one side, weeping and lamenting. [289]

The Teacher asked them, "Monks, why are you weeping?" "Our preceptor is dead, Reverend Sir." "Never mind, monks, grieve not; this is an eternal Law." "Yes, Reverend Sir, we too know that. But we asked our preceptor whether or not he had attained Specific Attainment, and he died without giving us an answer. That is why we are so distressed." Said the Teacher, "Monks, be not troubled. Your preceptor had attained the Fruit of the Third Path and thought, 'Even laymen are able to attain the Fruit of the Third Path. So soon as I attain Arahatsip, I will tell them.' It was because of embarrassment that he said nothing. When he died, he was reborn in the Pure Abode. Cheer up, monks; your preceptor had freed his heart from attachment to the Five Lusts.” So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 288-290.

218. If a man desire the Ineffable, if his heart thrill with desire for the Ineffable,
If his heart be free from attachment to the Five Lusts, he is called One Bound Up-stream.

XVI. 9. NANDIYA ATTAINS HEAVENLY GLORY¹

When a man who has long been absent. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Isipatana with reference to Nandiya. [290]

The story goes that at Benāres lived a youth named Nandiya, son of a family endowed with faith. He was all that his mother and father wished him to be, faithful, believing, a servitor of the Order. When he came of age, his mother and father desired that he should marry his maternal uncle's daughter Revatī, who lived in the house opposite. But Revatī was an unbeliever and was not accustomed to give alms, and therefore Nandiya did not wish to marry her. So Nandiya's mother said to Revatī, “Dear daughter, smear the floor neat and sweet in this house where the Congregation of Monks are to sit, prepare seats, set stands in their proper places, and when the monks arrive, take their bowls, invite them to sit down, and strain water for them with a straining-cup; when they have finished their meal, wash their bowls. If you will so do, you will win the favor of my son.” Revatī did so. Nandiya's mother said to her son, “Revatī is now patient of admonition.” Nandiya then gave his consent, the day was set, and they were married. [291]

Said Nandiya to his wife, “If you will minister faithfully to the Congregation of Monks and to my mother and father, on this condition you will be privileged to dwell in this house; therefore be heedful.” “Very well,” said Revatī, promising to do so. In a few days she learned to conduct herself like a true believer. She rendered true obedience to her husband, and in the course of time gave birth to two sons. When Nandiya's mother and father died, she became sole mistress of the household. Nandiya, having come into great wealth

¹ From this story is derived Vimāna-Vatthu Commentary, v. 2: 220–221. Vv. cm. 220⁴–221³⁶ is almost word for word the same as Dh. cm. iii. 290¹⁰–293⁷. Vv. cm. 222–229 is lacking in Dh. cm. Cf. Peta-Vatthu Commentary, iv. 4: 257. Text: N iii. 290–294.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

hasten forth and greet him, saying, ‘Dear friend, you have returned at last!’ Even so, when either a woman or a man who has done works of merit here, leaves this world and goes to the next, the heavenly deities take presents of ten sorts [293] and go forth to meet him and to greet him, saying, ‘Let me be first! let me be first!’” So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanzas,

219. When a man who has long been absent, returns safely from afar, Kinsfolk and friends and well-wishers greet him on his return.

220. Just so, when a man who has done good deeds goes from this world to the next,
The good deeds he has performed receive him even as kinsfolk receive a dear friend who has returned home.¹

¹ The Vimāna-Vatthu Commentary goes on to say (pp. 222–229) that Nandiya, after a life devoted to almsgiving, died and was reborn in the World of the Thirty-three; and that Revati, on the death of her husband, stopped the gifts of alms, abused the monks, and was cast alive into Hell.

XVII. 1. HOW ANGER MARRED A MAIDEN'S LOOKS ¹

One should put away anger. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Banyan Grove with reference to the Khattiya maiden Rohinī. [295]

1 a. The maiden with blotches on her face

The story goes that once upon a time Venerable Anuruddha went with his retinue of five hundred monks to Kapilavatthu. When the Elder's kinsfolk heard that he had arrived, all except the Elder's sister, a maiden named Rohinī, went to the monastery where the Elder was in residence and paid their respects to him. The Elder asked his kinsfolk, "Where is Rohinī?" "At home, Reverend Sir." "Why did she not come here?" "Reverend Sir, she is suffering from an eruption of the skin, and on this account was ashamed to come." The Elder caused her to be summoned, saying, "Summon her immediately." Rohinī fastened a covering of cloth about her face and went to the Elder.

When she came into his presence, the Elder asked her, "Rohinī, why did you not come here before?" "Reverend Sir, I am suffering from an eruption of the skin, and on this account I was ashamed to come." "But ought you not to perform works of merit?" "What can I do, Reverend Sir?" "Cause an assembly-hall to be erected." [296] "What funds have I to use for this purpose?" "Have you not a set of jewels?" "Yes, Reverend Sir, I have." "How much did it cost?" "It must have cost ten thousand pieces of money." "Well then, spend this in building an assembly-hall." "Who will build it for me, Reverend Sir?" The Elder looked at her kinsfolk who stood near and said, "This shall be your duty." "But, Reverend Sir, what will you do?" "I shall stay right here; therefore bring her the building materials." "Very well, Reverend Sir," said they, and brought them.

The Elder superintended the arrangements for the erection of the assembly-hall. Said he to Rohinī, “Cause an assembly-hall two stories in height to be erected and as soon as the planks are put in place above, you take your stand below, sweep constantly, prepare seats, and keep the water-vessels filled with water.” “Very well, Reverend Sir,” replied Rohinī. So she spent her set of jewels in the erection of an assembly-hall two stories in height. As soon as the planks were put in place above, she took her stand below, swept, and performed the other duties, and monks sat therein constantly. Even as she swept the assembly-hall, the eruption subsided.

¹ Text: N iii. 295-299.

When the assembly-hall was completed, she invited the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha; and when the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha had taken their seats, filling the assembly-hall, she offered them choice food, both hard and soft. When the Teacher finished his meal, he asked, “Whose is this offering?” “Your sister Rohinī’s, Reverend Sir.” “But where is she?” “In the house, Reverend Sir.” “Summon her.” She was unwilling to go. But in spite of her unwillingness, the Teacher caused her to be summoned all the same. When she had come [297] and saluted him and taken her seat, the Teacher said to her, “Rohinī, why did you not come before?” “Reverend Sir, I was suffering from an eruption of the skin and was ashamed to come.” “But do you know the reason why this eruption of the skin broke out on your body?” “No, Reverend Sir, I do not.” “It was because of anger that this eruption of the skin broke out on your body.” “Why, Reverend Sir, what did I do?” “Well then, listen,” said the Teacher. So saying, he told her the following

1 b. Story of the Past: The jealous queen and the nautch-girl

In times long past, the chief consort of the king of Benāres took a dislike to one of the king’s nautch-girls and said to herself, “I will make her suffer.” So she procured a number of large ripe scabs, reduced them to powder, and summoning that nautch-girl to her, contrived secretly to place the powdered scabs in her bed and cloak and her goats’ hair coverlet. Then, as if in fun, she sprinkled some of the powder on her body. Immediately the girl’s body became covered with pimples and boils so as to have a horridly angry look, and she went about scratching herself. When she lay down on her bed, there too the powdered scabs ate her up, and she suffered yet harsher pain. The chief consort at that time was Rohinī. End of Story of the Past.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XVII. 2. THE TREE-SPIRIT AND THE MONK¹

Whoever controls his anger when it is aroused. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Aggālava Shrine with reference to a certain monk.

For after the Teacher had given permission to the Congregation of Monks to lodge without the walls of the monastery, and while the treasurer of Rājagaha and others were busy providing such lodgings, a certain monk of Ālavi decided to build himself a lodging, and seeing a tree which suited him, [300] began to cut it down. Thereupon a certain spirit who had been reborn in that tree, and who had an infant child, appeared before the monk, carrying her child on her hip, and begged him not to cut down the tree, saying, “Master, do not cut down my home; it will be impossible for me to take my child and wander about without a home.” But the monk said, “I shall not be able to find another tree like this,” and paid no further attention to what she said.

The tree-spirit thought to herself, “If he but look upon this child, he will desist,” and placed the child on a branch of the tree. The monk, however, had already swung his axe, was unable to check the force of his upraised axe, and cut off the arm of the child. Furious with anger, the tree-spirit raised both her hands and exclaimed, “I will strike him dead.” In an instant, however, the thought came to her, “This monk is a righteous man; if I kill him, I shall go to Hell. Moreover, if other tree-spirits see monks cutting down their own trees, they will say to themselves, ‘Such and such a tree-spirit killed a monk under such circumstances,’ and will follow my example and kill other monks. Besides, this monk has a master; I will therefore content myself with reporting this matter to his master.”

Lowering her upraised hands, she went weeping to the Teacher, and having saluted him, stood on one side. Said the Teacher, “What is the matter, tree-spirit?” The tree-spirit replied, “Reverend Sir, your disciple did this and that to me. I was sorely tempted to kill him, but I thought this and that, refrained from killing him, and came here.” So saying, she told him the story in all its details. When the Teacher heard her story, [301] he said to her, “Well done, well done, spirit! you have done well in holding in, like a swift-speeding chariot, your anger when it was thus aroused." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ This story is derived from the Vinaya, Pācittiya, xi. 1: iv. 34. Text: N iii. 299–302.

222. Whoever controls his anger like a swift-speeding chariot, when it is aroused, —
Him I call a charioteer; other folk are merely holders of reins.

At the conclusion of the lesson the tree-spirit was established in the Fruit of Conversion; the assembled company also profited by it.

But even after the tree-spirit had obtained the Fruit of Conversion, she stood weeping. The Teacher asked her, "What is the matter, tree-spirit?" "Reverend Sir," she replied, "my home has been destroyed; what am I to do now?" Said the Teacher, "Enough, tree-spirit; be not disturbed; I will give you a place of abode." With these words he pointed out near the Perfumed Chamber at Jetavana a certain tree from which a tree-spirit had departed on the preceding day and said, "In such and such a place is a tree which stands by itself; enter therein." Accordingly the tree-spirit entered into that tree. Thenceforth, because the tree-spirit had received her place of abode as a gift from the Buddha, although spirits of great power [302] approached that tree, they were unable to shake it. The Teacher took this occasion to lay down and enjoin upon the monks the observance of the precept regarding the injuring of plants and trees.

XVII. 3. THE POOR MAN AND HIS DAUGHTER¹

One should overcome anger with kindness. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana, after he had eaten a meal at the house of Uttarā, with reference to the female lay disciple Uttarā. The story in due sequence is as follows:

3 a. Punṇa acquires merit

The story goes that there was a poor man in Rājagaha named Punṇa, who made a living by working for hire for the treasurer Sumana. Punṇa had a wife, and a daughter named Uttarā, both of whom were servants in the treasurer's household. Now one day they made a proclamation in Rājagaha, "For seven days let everyone make holiday in Rājagaha." The treasurer Sumana heard this proclamation; and when Punṇa came to him early the following morning, he addressed him, saying, "My man, our servants want to make holiday; will you make holiday, or will you work for hire?" Punṇa replied, "Master, a holiday is for the rich; I have not even enough rice in my house for to-morrow's porridge; what business have I making holiday? I will take my oxen and go plow." "Very well, take your oxen and go plow." So Punṇa took a strong pair of oxen and a plow and went home and said to his wife, "My dear wife, the citizens are making holiday, but I am so poor that I shall be obliged to work for hire; to-day when you bring me my meal, just cook me twice my usual allowance of rice." [303] So saying, he went to the field.

¹ From this story is derived Vimāna-Vatthu Commentary, i. 15: 62–69. Vv. cm. 63²–69²⁶ is almost word for word the same as Dh. cm. iii. 302¹⁰–313¹². Cf. Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Uttarā. This story is referred to at Milindapañha, 115¹³, 291^{9–11}. For the story of Sirimā's death, see Story xi. 2. Text: N iii. 302–314.

On that very day the Elder Sāriputta arose from a Trance of Cessation which had lasted seven days, and considered within himself, "On whom shall I bestow my blessing to-day?" Perceiving that Punṇa had entered the Net of his Knowledge, he considered further, "Has he faith and will he be able to entertain me?" Perceiving that Punṇa had faith, that he would be able to entertain him, and that he would thereby obtain a rich reward, the Elder took bowl and robe, went to the field where Punṇa was plowing, took his stand on the bank of a pit, and gazed earnestly at a certain bush. When Punṇa saw the Elder, he left his plow, saluted the Elder with the Five Rests, and said to him, "You must have need of a tooth-stick." And preparing a tooth-stick for the Elder, he gave it to him. Thereupon the Elder drew from under the folds of his robe his bowl and water-strainer and gave them to Punṇa. "He must wish some water," thought Punṇa. So taking the water-strainer, he strained water and gave it to the Elder. Thought the Elder, "This man lives in the last house of all. If I go to the door of his house, his wife will not be able to see me; therefore I will wait right here until she sets out on the road with his meal." So the Elder waited right there a little while, and when he perceived that she had set out on the road, he started off in the direction of the city.

The poor man's wife saw the Elder on the road and thought to herself, "Once when I had alms to give, [304] I did not see the Elder; and once again when I saw the Elder, I had not alms to give. To-day, however, I not only see the Elder, but also have alms to give. Will he give me his blessing?" Thereupon she set down the jar of rice, saluted the Elder with the Five Rests, and said to him, "Reverend Sir, consider not whether this is coarse food or fine food, but bestow

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

looks just the same way.” Punṇa arose, went to the field, and taking a lump of earth in his hand, he struck the handle of the plow with it, whereupon he perceived that it was solid gold. [306] “Oh,” he exclaimed, “this very day is manifested the fruit of the alms given to the noble Captain of the Faith! But it will be impossible for us to conceal so much wealth and to make use of it ourselves.” So he filled with gold the dinner-basket his wife had brought, and going to the royal palace, as soon as the king was ready to receive him, he entered and paid obeisance to the king.

“What is it, my man?” asked the king. “Your majesty,” replied Punṇa, “to-day all the ground I have plowed stands covered with gold. Should not orders be given to haul it to the palace?” “Who are you?” “Punṇa is my name.” “But what did you do to-day?” “Early in the morning I gave the Captain of the Faith a toothstick and water for rinsing the mouth; likewise my wife gave him the boiled rice which she was bringing to me.” When the king heard this he exclaimed, “This very day is manifested the fruit of the alms which you gave to the Captain of the Faith. Friend, what shall I do?” “Send several thousand carts and have the gold hauled to the palace.” The king sent the carts.

As the king’s men gathered up the gold, they said, “This is the property of the king.” Thereupon every particle of gold they took into their hands turned to earth once more. They went and reported the matter to the king. The king asked them, “What did you say when you gathered up the gold?” “Your majesty,” replied the men, “we said that the gold was your property.” “My men,” replied the king, “who am I? Go [307] and say, ‘This is the property of Punṇa.’ Then gather up the gold.” The king’s men did as they were told. Immediately every particle they took into their hands turned to gold once more. They hauled all of this gold to the palace-court and heaped it up in a pile; the pile was eighty cubits high.

The king ordered the citizens to assemble and asked them, “Is there anyone in this city who possesses so much gold as this?” “No, your majesty, there is not.” “What should be given to him?” “The treasurer’s parasol, your majesty.” Said the king, “Let his name be Treasurer Great-Wealth, Treasurer Bahudhana.” So the king gave him the treasurer’s parasol and bestowed all this great wealth upon him.

Then said Punṇa to the king, “Your majesty, all this time we have lived in other people’s houses; give us a place to live in.” The king pointed to the site of the former treasurer's house and said, "Well, look,—you notice a thicket growing over there. Have that thicket cleared and a house built for yourself there." In a few days Punṇa built him a house in this place. When the house was finished, he gave a festival in honor of the opening of the house and a festival in honor of the raising of the parasol simultaneously; and for the space of seven days he gave alms to the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha. In pronouncing the words of thanksgiving, the Teacher preached the Law in orderly sequence. At the conclusion of his discourse, the treasurer Punṇa and his wife and his daughter Uttarā, all three, obtained the Fruit of Conversion.

After a time the treasurer of Rājagaha selected the daughter of the treasurer Punṇa to be the wife of his own son. "I will not give her," said Punṇa. Said the treasurer of Rājagaha, "Do not act in this manner. All this time you have dwelt near us, [308] and now you have obtained great wealth and high position. Give your daughter to be the wife of my son." But Punṇa said to himself, "He is a heretic, and my daughter cannot live without the Three Jewels. I will not give him my daughter." Many noble youths, treasurers and accountants and others who held high office, sought to persuade him to reconsider his decision, saying, "Do not break off friendly relations with him; give him your daughter." Finally he accepted their advice, and on the day of full moon of the month Āsālhi, gave him his daughter.

3 b. Uttarā and Sirimā

From the day Uttarā went to the house of her husband, she was no longer privileged to approach a monk or a nun, or to give alms, or to listen to the Law. When two months and a half had thus passed, she asked the women-servants who waited upon her, "How much of the rainy season still remains?" "Half a month, your ladyship." So Uttarā sent the following message to her father, "Why have they thrown me into such a prison? It would be far better to put a brand on me and proclaim me a common wench, than to give me over to such an unbelieving household as this. From the day I first entered this house, I have not so much as seen a monk, nor have I had the opportunity to perform a single work of merit."

When her father received this message, he expressed displeasure, saying, "Oh, how unhappy my daughter is!" And he sent fifteen thousand pieces of money to his daughter, together with the following message, "There is a courtesan in this city named Sirimā, who receives a thousand pieces of money a night. With this money have her brought to your husband's house and install her as your husband's mistress. Then you can devote your time to the performance of good works." [309]

So Uttarā caused Sirimā to be summoned to her house and said to her, "Friend, take this money and minister to your friend during the coming fortnight." "Very well," replied Sirimā, consenting to the bargain. So Uttarā took Sirimā to her husband. When Uttarā's husband saw Sirimā, he asked, "What does this mean?" Uttarā replied, "Husband, during the coming fortnight my friend is to be your mistress. For my part, during the coming fortnight I desire to give alms and listen to the Law." When Uttarā's husband saw Sirimā, beautiful woman that she was, desire took possession of him, and he immediately consented to the arrangement, saying, "Very well; so be it."

Thereupon Uttarā invited the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, saying, "Reverend Sir, during the coming fortnight pray take your meals right here and go nowhere else." On obtaining the Teacher's consent, she rejoiced at heart and said to herself, "From this day forth, until the Great Terminal Festival, I shall have the privilege of waiting on the Teacher and listening to the Law." And she bustled about the kitchen making the necessary arrangements, saying, "Cook the porridge thus; cook the cakes thus."

"To-morrow will be the Terminal Festival," thought her husband as he stood at his window looking towards the kitchen. "What is that foolish woman doing?" When he saw her going to and fro arranging for the feast, her body moist with sweat and sprinkled with ashes and smeared with charcoal and soot, he thought to himself, "Ah, in such a place the fool does not enjoy luxury and comfort. 'I will minister to the shaveling monkings,' thinks she; and her heart rejoices as she goes about." He laughed and left the window.¹ [310]

As he left the window, Sirimā who stood near him, thought to herself, "What did he see to make him laugh?" Looking out of the same window, she saw Uttarā. "It was because he saw her that he laughed," thought Sirimā; "doubtless an intimacy exists between them." (We are told that although Sirimā had lived in this house

¹ For a discussion of the Laugh as a psychic motif, see M. Bloomfield, On Recurring Psychic Motifs in Hindu Fiction, and the Laugh and Cry Motif, JAOS., 36. 79-87.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Uttarā replied, “I am a daughter and my father is living. If my father pardons you, I will also pardon you.” “Very well, my lady, I will also ask pardon of your father [312] the treasurer Puṇṇa.” “Puṇṇa is my father in the round of birth and rebirth. If my father in that state where there is no round of birth and rebirth will pardon you, then will I also pardon you.” “But who is your father in that state where there is no round of birth and rebirth?” “The Buddha, the Supremely Enlightened.” “I put no confidence in him.” “I will cause you to do so. To-morrow the Teacher will come here with his retinue of monks; obtain such offerings as you can and come right here and ask his pardon.”

“Very well, my lady,” replied Sirimā. And rising from her seat, she went home and gave orders to the five hundred women of her retinue to put themselves in readiness to accompany her. Then she procured various kinds of hard foods and sauces, and on the following day, taking these offerings with her, she went to Uttarā’s house. Not daring to place her offerings in the bowls of the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, she stood waiting. Uttarā took all of her offerings and made the proper disposal of them, and at the conclusion of the meal Sirimā together with her retinue prostrated herself at the Teacher’s feet. Thereupon the Teacher asked her, “What sin have you committed?” “Reverend Sir, yesterday I did this and that. But my friend only made her serving-women stop beating me and could not do enough to befriend me. Recognizing her goodness, I asked her to pardon me. But she said to me, ‘If the Teacher will pardon you, I also will pardon you.’” “Uttarā, is this true?” “Yes, Reverend Sir. My friend flung boiling ghee on my head.” “What thoughts did you then entertain?” [313] “Reverend Sir, I suffused her with love, thinking to myself, ‘This world may be narrow, and the World of Brahmā low; but the goodness of my friend is great indeed, in that through her assistance I have received the privilege of giving alms and listening to the Law. If I cherish anger towards her, may this ghee burn me. If not, may it not burn me.’” Said the Teacher, “Well done, well done, Uttarā! That is the right way to overcome anger. Anger should be overcome with kindness. He that utters abuse and slander may be overcome by him who refrains from uttering abuse and slander. An obstinate miser may be overcome by the giving of one’s own. A speaker of lies may be overcome by speaking the truth.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

223. One should overcome anger with kindness;
 One should overcome evil with good;
 One should overcome the niggard with gifts,
 And the speaker of falsehood with truth.

XVII. 4. DO TRIFLING ACTS OF MERIT LEAD TO HEAVEN? ¹

A man should speak the truth. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Moggallāna the Great. [314]

For once upon a time the Elder made a journey to heaven, and saw a spirit possessed of great power standing at the door of his mansion. The spirit straightway approached the Elder, saluted him, and took his stand before him. Thereupon the Elder said to him, "Spirit, you possess great glory; what did you do to get it?" "Oh, Reverend Sir, do not ask me." (We are told that the spirit had performed but a trifling work of merit, and that he spoke thus because he was ashamed to mention it.) The Elder repeated his question, saying, "Please tell me." Finally the spirit said, "Reverend Sir, I neither gave alms nor rendered honor nor listened to the Law; all that I did was to tell the truth."

The Elder [315] stopped at the doors of other mansions also, and put the same question to one after another of the female spirits who approached him. They likewise strove to conceal the works of merit which they had performed, but likewise failed to put off the Elder. One of them said, "Reverend Sir, as for almsgiving and the other duties of religion, I did nothing. But in the dispensation of the Buddha Kassapa, I was the slave of a certain man who was excessively harsh and cruel. He thought nothing of seizing a stick or a staff and striking off a person's head. But when angry thoughts arose within me, I would rebuke myself, saying, 'He is your master and has power to make public proclamation concerning you, or to cut off your nose or other members; therefore be not angry.' Thus would I rebuke myself and restrain my angry thoughts; by so doing, I attained this glory. Another said, "Reverend Sir, while I was guarding a field of sugar-cane, I gave a stalk of sugar-cane to a certain monk.” Another said, “I gave a timbarūsaka.” Another said, “I gave an elāluka.” Another said, “I gave a [316] phārusaka.” Another said, “I gave a handful of radishes.” Another said, “I gave a handful of nimb-fruit.” In such terms did each mention the slight gift which each had made. All concluded as follows, “By these means did we obtain this glory.”

¹ Cf. Dhammapāla's Introduction to the Vimāna-Vatthu Commentary, pp. 2-4. Text: N iii. 314-317.

After listening to the recital of their former deeds of merit, the Elder approached the Teacher and asked him, “Reverend Sir, is it possible to obtain heavenly glory merely by telling the truth or restraining one’s angry thoughts or giving a timbarūsaka and the like?” “Moggallāna, why do you ask me? Did not the female spirits explain the whole matter to you?” “Yes, Reverend Sir, I am convinced that by such slight acts as these heavenly glory may be gained.” Then the Teacher said to him, “Moggallāna, merely by telling the truth, merely by putting away anger, merely by giving a slight gift, men may attain the heavenly world.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

224. A man should speak the truth, a man should not get angry,
A man should give, when asked to give a little;
By these three acts a man may attain the World of the Gods.

XVII. 5. A BRAHMAN GREETES THE BUDDHA AS HIS SON¹

They who do no injury. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Añjanavana near Sāketa with reference to a question asked by the monks. [317]

The story goes that once upon a time, as the Exalted One, accompanied by the Congregation of Monks, was entering Sāketa for alms, a certain old Brahman who lived in Sāketa passed out of the city, and seeing the Possessor of the Ten Forces entering within the gate, fell down before his feet, and grasping him firmly by the ankles, said to him, “Dear son, is it not the duty of sons to care for their mother and father when they have grown old? Why is it that for so long a time you have not shown yourself to us? This is the first time I have seen you. Come look upon your mother.” And taking the Teacher

¹ This story is almost word for word the same as Jātaka 68: i. 308–310. Cf. Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Nakulapitā. It is referred to at Milindapañha, 350¹⁴⁻¹⁵. Text: N iii. 317–321.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies states of existence. Having thus explained that he had been their son during three thousand states of existence, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

If the mind rests satisfied, and the heart reposes confidence in a man,
One may repose confidence in that man, though it be the first time one has seen him.

Through previous association or present advantage,
That old love springs up again like the lotus in the water.

For the entire period of three months during which the Teacher kept residence, he resorted only to that family for his meals, and at the end of the three months they experienced Arahatsip and passed into Nibbāna. Men rendered high honors to their bodies, placed both bodies on one hearse, and carried them out. The Teacher, surrounded by a retinue of five hundred monks, accompanied the bodies to the burning-ground. Hearing the report, “They were the mother and father of the Buddhas,” a great multitude went forth from the city. The Teacher entered a certain hall near the burning-ground and remained therein. Men saluted the Teacher, saying to him, “Reverend Sir, do not [320] grieve because your mother and father are dead,” and held sweet converse with him. Instead of repulsing them by saying, “Speak not thus,” the Teacher surveyed the thoughts of the company and preaching the Law with reference to that particular occasion, recited the Jarā Sutta,¹ as follows,

Short indeed is this life; even before a hundred years have passed, one dies;
If one lives longer, then he dies of old age.

The monks, not knowing that the Brahman and his wife had passed into Nibbāna, asked the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, what will be their future state?” The Teacher replied, “Monks, in the case of such as they, Arahats and sages, there is no future state. Such as they attain the Eternal, the Deathless, Great Nibbāna. So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

225. They who do no injury, the sages, they who ever control their bodies, Such go to a place from which they pass no more; and having gone there, sorrow not.

¹ Sutta Nipāta, iv. 6 (Stanzas 804–813).

XVII. 6. IT IS THE GIVER THAT MAKES THE GIFT¹

They that are ever watchful. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence on Mount Vulture Peak with reference to Puṇṇā, a female slave of the treasurer of Rājagaha. [321]

The story goes that one day they gave her much rice to pound. She pounded away until late at night, lighting a lamp to work by; finally she became very weary and in order to rest herself, stepped outside and stood in the wind with her body moist with sweat. Now at that time Dabba the Malla was steward of lodgings for the monks. [322] Having listened to the Law, that he might show the monks the way to their respective lodgings, he lighted his finger, and preceding the monks, created by supernatural power a light for them.

The light enabled Puṇṇā to see the monks making their way along the mountain. She thought to herself, "As for me, I am oppressed by my own discomfort, and so, even at this time, am unable to sleep. Why is it that the reverend monks are unable to sleep?" Having considered the matter, she came to the following conclusion, "It must be that some monk who resides there is sick, or else is suffering from the bite of some reptile." So when it was dawn, she took some rice-dust, placed it in the palm of her hand, moistened it with water, and having thus mixed a cake, cooked it over a bed of charcoal. Then, saying to herself, "I will eat it on the road leading to the bathing-place on the river," she placed the cake in a fold of her dress, and taking a water-pot in her hand, set out for the bathing-place on the river.

The Teacher set out on the same path, intending likewise to enter that village for alms. When Puṇṇā saw the Teacher, she thought to herself, "On other days when I have seen the Teacher, I have had no alms to give him, or if I have had alms to give him, I have not seen him; to-day, however, not only do I meet the Teacher face to face, but I have alms to give him. If he would accept this cake without considering whether the food is of inferior or superior quality, I would give it to him." So setting her water-pot down on one side, she saluted the Teacher [323] and said to him, "Reverend Sir, accept this coarse food and bestow your blessing upon me."

The Teacher looked at Elder Ānanda, whereupon the Elder drew from under a fold of his robe and presented to the Teacher a bowl which was an offering to the Teacher from a great king. The Teacher held out the bowl and received therein the offering of the cake. When Puṇṇā had placed the cake in the Teacher's bowl, she saluted him with the Five Rests and said to him, "Reverend Sir, may the Truth which you have beheld be of avail to me also." The Teacher replied, "So be it." And remaining standing as before, he pronounced the words of thanksgiving. Thereupon Puṇṇā thought to herself, "Although the Teacher bestowed on me a blessing as he took my cake, yet he will not eat it himself. He will doubtless keep it until he has gone a little way and will then give it to a crow or a dog. Then he will go to the house of some king or prince and make a meal of choice food."

¹ Cf. Jātaka 254: ii. 286-291. This story is referred to at Milindapañha, 115¹⁴. Text: N iii. 321-325.

Thought the Teacher to himself, "What was the thought in the mind of this woman?" Perceiving what was in her mind, the Teacher looked at Elder Ānanda and intimated that he wished to sit down. The Elder spread out a robe and offered the Teacher a seat. The Teacher sat down without the city and ate his breakfast. The deities squeezed out nectar, food proper to gods and men alike throughout the circle of the worlds, even as one squeezes a honeycomb, and imparted it to the Teacher's food. Puṇṇā stood looking on. At the conclusion of the Teacher's breakfast the Elder gave him water. When the Teacher had finished his breakfast, he addressed Puṇṇā and said, "Puṇṇā, why [324] have you blamed my disciples?" "I do not blame your disciples, Reverend Sir." "Then what did you say when you saw my disciples?"

"Reverend Sir, the explanation is very simple. I thought to myself, 'As for me, I am oppressed by my own discomfort, and so am unable to sleep; why is it that the reverend monks are unable to sleep? It must be that some monk who resides there is sick, or else is suffering from the bite of some reptile.'" The Teacher listened to her words and then said to her, "Puṇṇā, in your own case it is because you are afflicted with discomfort that you are unable to sleep. But my disciples are assiduously watchful and therefore sleep not." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

226. They that are ever watchful, they that study both by day and by night,
They that strive after Nibbāna, such men rid themselves of the evil passions.

At the conclusion of the lesson Puṇṇā, even as she stood there, was established in the Fruit of Conversion; the assembled company also profited by the lesson.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

lay disciples of mine to hear the Law and approached Elder Revata. But he had nothing to say to me; therefore I was provoked at him and have come here. Preach the Law to me.” “Well then, lay disciple,” said the Elder Sāriputta, “sit down.” And forthwith Elder Sāriputta expounded the Abhidhamma at great length.¹

Thought the lay disciple, “Abhidhamma is exceedingly abstruse, and the Elder has expounded this alone to me at great length; of what use is he to us?” Provoked, he took his retinue with him and went to Elder Ānanda. Said Elder Ānanda, “What is it, lay disciple?” Atula replied, “Reverend Sir, we approached Elder Revata for the purpose of hearing the Law, and got not so much as a syllable from him. Provoked at this, we went to Elder Sāriputta and he expounded to us at great length Abhidhamma alone with all its subtleties. ‘Of what use is he to us?’ thought we to ourselves; and provoked at him also, we came here. Preach the Law to us, Reverend Sir.” “Well then,” replied Elder Ānanda, “sit down and listen.” Thereupon Elder Ānanda expounded the Law to them very briefly, and making it very easy for them to understand.

But they were provoked at the Elder Ānanda also, and going to the Teacher, saluted him, and sat down respectfully on one side. Said the Teacher to them, [327] “Lay disciples, why have you come here?” “To hear the Law, Reverend Sir.” “But you have heard the Law.” “Reverend Sir, first we went to Elder Revata, and he had nothing to say to us; provoked at him, we approached Elder Sāriputta, and he expounded the Abhidhamma to us at great length; but we were unable to understand his discourse, and provoked at him, approached the Elder Ānanda; Elder Ānanda, however, expounded the Law to us very briefly, wherefore we were provoked at him also and came here.”

The Teacher heard them say their say and then replied, “Atula, from days of yore until now, it has been the invariable practice of men to blame him who said nothing, him who said much, and him who said little. There is no one who deserves unqualified blame and no one who deserves unqualified praise. Even kings are blamed by some and praised by others. Even the great earth, even the sun and moon, even a Supremely Enlightened Buddha, sitting and speaking in the midst of the Fourfold Assembly, some blame, and others praise. For blame or praise bestowed by utter simpletons is a matter of no account. But he whom a man of learning and intelligence blames or praises,—

¹ A photogravure of a palm-leaf manuscript book from Ceylon, “The Abhidhamma in brief,” is given in volume 28, between pages x and xi.

he is blamed or praised indeed.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas, [328]

227. This is an old, old saying, Atula, this is no mere saying of to-day:
 “They blame him who sits silent, they blame him who says much,
 They also blame him who says little.” There is no one in the world that is not blamed.
228. There never was, there never will be, there lives not now
 A man who receives unqualified blame or unqualified praise.
229. If men of intelligence always, from day to day, praise
 Some man as free from flaws, wise, endowed with learning and goodness,— 230. Who would venture to find fault with such a man, any more than with a coin made of gold of the Jambū river?
 Even the gods praise such a man, even by Brahmā is he praised.

XVII. 8. THE BAND OF SIX ¹

Angry deeds should one control. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to the monks of the Band of Six. [330]

For one day the monks of the Band of Six put wooden shoes on their feet, and taking staves of wood in their two hands, walked up and down on the surface of a flat rock. The Teacher hearing the clatter, asked Elder Ānanda, “Ānanda, what is that noise?” The Elder replied, “The monks of the Band of Six are walking about in wooden shoes; they are making the clatter you hear.” When the Teacher heard this, he promulgated the following precept, “A monk should control his deeds, his words, and his thoughts.” So saying, he expounded the Law by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

231. Angry deeds should one control; one should be restrained in action;
 One should renounce evil deeds; one should do good deeds.
232. Angry words should one control; one should be restrained in word;
 One should renounce evil words; one should speak good words.
233. Angry thoughts should one control; one should be restrained in thought;
 One should renounce evil thoughts; one should cultivate good thoughts.
234. Wise men who control their deeds, wise men who control their speech,
 Wise men who control their thoughts, such men are indeed well controlled.

¹ This story is derived from the Vinaya, Mahā Vagga, v. 6: i. 188²–189³. Text: N iii. 330–331.

BOOK XVIII. BLEMISHES, MALA VAGGA

XVIII. 1. THE COW-KILLER AND HIS SON ¹

Now art thou as a withered leaf. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain killer of cows. [332]

At Sāvatti, so we are told, lived a certain killer of cows. He would kill cows, select the choicest portions of their flesh for his own table, cause the same to be cooked, and then sit down with son and wife and eat the same; the rest he sold for a price. For fifty-five years he kept up this practice of killing cows. During all this time, although the Teacher resided at a neighboring monastery, on no occasion did he give the Teacher so much as a spoonful of rice-gruel or boiled rice by way of alms. Unless he had meat to eat, he never ate rice. One day while it was still light, after selling some beef, he gave his wife a piece of beef to cook for his supper, and then went to the pool to bathe.

While he was absent, a friend of his came to the house and said to his wife, "Let me have a little of the beef which your husband has for sale; [333] a guest has come to my house." "We have no beef for sale. Your friend has sold all his beef and has gone to the pool to bathe." "Do not refuse my request; if you have a piece of beef in the house, give it to me." "There is not a piece of beef in the house, except a piece which your friend has set aside for his own supper." Thought the friend of the cow-killer, "If there is not a piece of beef in the house except a piece which my friend has set aside for his own supper, and if he will not eat unless he can have meat to eat, he will certainly not give me this piece of beef." So he took the piece of beef himself and went off with it.

After the cow-killer had bathed, he returned home. When his wife set before him rice which she had boiled for him, seasoned with leaves of her own cooking, he said to her, "Where is the meat?" "Husband, there is none." "Did I not give you meat to cook before

¹ Cf. Stories i. 10, v. 1 c, xii. 1 c, and xxiv. 11. Text: N iii. 332-338.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

going to Sāvatti to live, established households of their own, and became faithful followers of the Buddha. Their father remained in Takkasilā, spent his days without performing a single work of merit, [335] and finally reached old age. His sons thought to themselves, “Our father is now an old man,” and sent for him to come and live with them.

Then they thought to themselves, “Let us give alms in behalf of our father.” Accordingly they invited the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha to take a meal with them. On the following day they provided seats in their house for the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, served them with food, showing them every attention, and at the conclusion of the meal said to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, this food which we have presented to you is the food whereby our father lives; render thanks therefor to our father.” The Teacher thereupon addressed him and said, “Lay disciple, you are an old man. Your body has ripened and is like a withered leaf. You have no good works to serve as provisions for the journey to the world beyond. Make for yourself a refuge. Be wise; be not a simpleton.” Thus spoke the Teacher, pronouncing the words of thanksgiving; and having thus spoken, pronounced the following Stanzas,

235. Now art thou as a withered leaf; death’s messengers await thee;
Thou standest at the point of departure; thou hast no provisions for the journey.
236. Make for thyself an island; haste thee to struggle; be wise;
When thy infirmities have been blown away, and thou hast freed thyself from the evil passions, thou shalt go to the heavenly place of the Elect. [336]

At the conclusion of the lesson the lay disciple was established in the Fruit of Conversion; the assembled company also profited by the lesson.

They invited the Teacher also for the following day and gave alms to him. When the Teacher had finished his meal, and it was time for him to pronounce the words of thanksgiving, they said to him, “Reverend Sir, this food which we have presented to you is the food whereby our father lives; render thanks therefor to him alone.” So the Teacher thanked him, pronouncing the two following Stanzas, [337]

237. Thy life is now brought to a close; thou art come into the presence of Death;
Thou hast no abiding-place by the way; thou hast no provisions for the journey.
238. Make for thyself an island; haste thee to struggle; be wise.
When thy infirmities have been blown away, and thou hast freed thyself from the evil passions, thou shalt no more come unto birth and old age.

XVIII. 2. LITTLE BY LITTLE ¹

One after another. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain Brahman. [338]

The story goes that early one morning this Brahman went out of the city, stopped at the place where the monks put on their robes, and stood and watched them as they put on their robes. Now this place was thickly overgrown with grass. As one of the monks put on his robe, the skirt of the robe dragged through the grass and became wet with drops of dew. Thought the Brahman, [339] "The grass should be cleared away from this place." So on the following day he took his mattock, went thither, cleared the place, and made it as clean and smooth as a threshing-floor. The day after, he went to that place again. As the monks put on their robes, he observed that the skirt of the robe of one of the monks dropped to the ground and dragged in the dust. Thought the Brahman, "Sand should be sprinkled here." So he brought sand and sprinkled it on the ground.

Now one day before breakfast the heat was intense. On this occasion he noticed that as the monks put on their robes, sweat poured from their bodies. Thought the Brahman, "Here I ought to cause a pavilion to be erected." Accordingly he caused a pavilion to be erected. Again one day, early in the morning, it rained. On this occasion also, as the Brahman watched the monks, he noticed that their robes were wetted by the drops of rain. Thought the Brahman, "Here I ought to cause a hall to be erected." So there he caused a hall to be erected. When the hall was finished, he thought to himself, "Now I will hold a festival in honor of the completion of the hall." Accordingly he invited the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, [340] seated the monks within and without the hall, and gave alms.

At the conclusion of the meal he took the Teacher's bowl to permit him to pronounce the words of thanksgiving. "Reverend Sir," said he, "as I stood in this place when the monks were putting on their robes and watched them, I saw this and that, and I did this and that." And beginning at the beginning, he told the Teacher the whole story. The Teacher listened to his words and then said, "Brahman, a wise man by doing good works, time after time, little by little, gradually removes the stains of his own evil deeds.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 338-341.

239. One after another, little by little, time after time, a wise man Should blow away his own impurities, even as a smith blows away the impurities of silver.

XVIII. 3. THE LOUSE THAT WOULD HAVE HIS OWN ¹

Even as rust which springs from iron. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a monk named Elder Tissa. [341]

The story goes that a certain youth of respectable family, who lived at Sāvatti, retired from the world, became a monk, and made his full profession, becoming known as Elder Tissa. Subsequently, while he was in residence at a monastery in the country, he received a coarse cloth eight cubits in length. Having completed residence, he celebrated the Terminal Festival, and taking his cloth with him, went home and placed it in the hands of his sister. Thought his sister, “This robe-cloth is not suited to my brother.” So with a sharp knife she cut it into strips, pounded them in a mortar, whipped and beat and cleaned the shoddy, and, spinning fine yarn, had it woven into a robe-cloth. The Elder procured thread and needles, and assembling some young monks and novices who were skilled makers of robes, went to his sister [342] and said, “Give me that cloth; I will have a robe made out of it.”

She took down a robe-cloth nine cubits in length and placed it in the hands of her youngest brother. He took it, spread it out, and said, “My robe-cloth was a coarse one, eight cubits long, but this is a fine one, nine cubits long. This is not mine; it is yours. I don’t want it. Give me the same one I gave you.” “Reverend Sir, this cloth is yours; take it.” He refused to do so. Then his sister told him everything she had done and gave him the cloth again, saying, “Reverend Sir, this one is yours; take it.” Finally he took it, went to the monastery and set the robe-makers to work. His sister prepared rice-gruel, boiled rice, and other provisions for the robe-makers, and on the day when the cloak was finished, gave them an extra allowance. Tissa looked at the robe and took a liking to it. Said he, “To-morrow I

¹ Text: N iii. 341-344.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

them to ruin.” So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza,

240. Even as rust which springs from iron no sooner appears than it eats away the iron, Precisely so in the case of transgressors, their own evil deeds bring them to an evil end.

XVIII. 4. PRIDE GOETH BEFORE A FALL¹

Non-repetition mars the Sacred Word. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Lāludāyi. [344]

At Sāvatti, we are told, five crores of Noble Disciples [345] gave alms before breakfast, and after breakfast, taking ghee, oil, honey, molasses, garments, and other requisites, went to the monastery and listened to the Law. When they departed, after listening to the Law, they praised the virtues of Elders Sāriputta and Moggallāna. The Elder Udāyi overheard their talk and said to them, “It is because you have heard only these Elders preach the Law that you talk as you do; I wonder what you would say if you were to hear me preach the Law.” Those who heard his remark thought to themselves, “This must be some preacher of the Law; we ought without fail to hear this Elder also preach the Law.” So one day they made the following request of the Elder, “Reverend Sir, to-day is the day when we are wont to go and listen to the Law. After we have presented alms to the Congregation of Monks, be good enough, Reverend Sir, to preach the Law to us by day.” The Elder accepted the invitation.

When it was time for them to listen to the Law, they went to the Elder and said, “Reverend Sir, preach the Law to us.” So Elder Udāyi sat down in the seat, took a painted fan in his hand, waved it back and forth, but not knowing a single word of the Law, said, “I will intone the Sacred Word; let some one else preach the Law.” So saying, he descended from the seat. The disciples caused someone else to preach the Law, and again assisted him to mount the seat to intone the Sacred Word. But again the second time, the Elder, who knew no more about intoning than he did about preaching, said, “I will recite the Sacred Word at night; let some one else intone the Sacred Word now.” The disciples therefore caused another to intone the Sacred Word and at night brought the Elder in again.

¹ Cf. Story xi. 7, and Jātaka 153: ii. 9-12. Text: N iii. 344-348.

But at night also he knew as little how to intone, and said, "I will recite at dawn; let someone else recite at night." So saying, he descended from the seat [346]. The disciples caused another to recite the Sacred Word at night and at dawn brought the Elder in again. But once more he failed. Thereupon the multitude took up clods of earth, sticks, and other missiles, and threatened him, saying, "Simpleton, while we were talking about the virtues of Elders Sāriputta and Moggallāna, you said this and that. Why don't you say something now?" The Elder took to flight, and the multitude ran after him. As he ran, he fell into a certain cesspool.

The multitude talked over the incidents of the day, saying, "As Lāludayi listened to our praise of the virtues of Elders Sāriputta and Moggallāna, he became jealous, declared himself to be a preacher of the Law, and when people rendered him honor and said to him, 'We would hear the Law,' he sat down in the Seat of the Law four times, although he knew not a single word suitable to recite. Then, when we said to him, 'Yet you put yourself on an equality with our Noble Elders Sāriputta and Moggallāna,' and took up clods of earth, sticks, and other missiles, and threatened him, he ran away and fell into a cesspool." The Teacher drew near and asked them, "Monks, what are you talking about now, as you sit here all gathered together?" When they told him, he said, "Monks, this is not the first time he has wallowed in a cesspool; he did the same thing in a previous state of existence also." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,¹

I am a beast, master. And, master, you are a beast too.
Come, lion, turn around. Why do you flee in fear?

Boar, you are filthy, your bristles are foul, with bad smells you reek.
If you desire to fight, I yield you the victory, master. [347]

After relating this Jātaka in detail, the Teacher said, "At that time the lion was the Elder Sāriputta and the boar was Lāludāyi." Having finished the lesson, the Teacher said, "Monks, Udāyi had learned only the merest fragment of the Law, but he never repeated the Texts. No matter how much or how little one may learn of the Sacred Word, not to repeat it is a grievous fault." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

241. Non-repetition mars the Sacred Word; inactivity mars the household life;
Sloth is a blemish on beauty; heedlessness is a blemish on the watchman.

¹ Jātaka 153: ii. 10-12.

XVIII. 5. THE WICKEDNESS OF WOMEN ¹

Lewdness is a blemish on a woman. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to a certain youth of respectable family. [348]

The story goes that this youth married a young woman of equal birth. From the day of her marriage his wife played the adulteress. Embarrassed by her adulteries, the youth had not the courage to meet people face to face. [349] After a few days had passed, it became his duty to wait upon the Buddha. So he approached the Teacher, saluted him, and sat down on one side. "Disciple, why is it that you no longer let yourself be seen?" asked the Teacher. The youth told the Teacher the whole story. Then said the Teacher to him, "Disciple, even in a former state of existence I said, 'Women are like rivers and the like, and a wise man should not get angry with them.' But because rebirth is hidden from you, you do not understand this." In compliance with a request of the youth, the Teacher related the following Jātaka:²

Like a river, a road, a tavern, a hall, a shed,
Such are women of this world: their time is never known.

"For," said the Teacher, "lewdness is a blemish on a woman; niggardliness is a blemish on the giver of alms; evil deeds, because of the destruction they cause, both in this world and the next, are blemishes on all living beings; but of all blemishes, ignorance is the worst blemish." So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanzas,

242. Lewdness is a blemish on a woman; niggardliness is a blemish on a giver;
Evil ways are blemishes, both in this world and the next.

243. But worse than any ordinary blemish, the worst, indeed, of all blemishes, is ignorance;
Rid yourselves of this blemish, monks, and be without blemish.

XVIII. 6. COURTESY AND RUDENESS ³

Easy is the life. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Culla Sāri, a co-resident of Elder Sāriputta. [351]

¹ Cf. Jātaka 65: i. 301-302. Text: N iii. 348-351.

² Jātaka 65: i. 301-302.

³ Text: N iii. 351-355.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

247. And the man that is addicted to the drinking of liquor and spirits,
Such a man, even in this present world, digs up his own root.

248. Know this, O man, that the unrestrained are fallen upon evil ways;
Let not greed and wrongdoing subject thee to suffering for long.

XVIII. 8. THE FAULT-FINDING NOVICE ¹

People give. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a novice named Tissa. [357]

It is said of the novice Tissa that he used to go about finding fault with the gifts of the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, and of the female lay disciple Visākhā, and even of the five crores of Noble Disciples; he even went so far as to find fault with the Gifts beyond Compare. Whenever he received cold food in their refectory, he would complain because it was cold; whenever he received hot food, he would complain because it was hot. Whenever they gave but a little, he would blame them, saying, “Why do they give so very little?” And whenever they gave abundant alms, he would also blame them, saying, “I suppose they had no place in their house to put it;” or, “Surely they should give the monks only so much as they require to support life; so much gruel and boiled rice as this is absolutely wasted.” But with reference to his own kinsfolk, he would say, “Oh, the house of our kinsfolk is a veritable tavern for all the monks who come from all the four quarters!” [358] Thus did he sing the praises of his kinsfolk.

Now Tissa was in reality the son of a certain gatekeeper. While accompanying some carpenters on a journey through the country, he retired from the world on his arrival at Sāvattthi and became a monk. When the monks observed that he was thus finding fault with the gifts and other good works of men, they thought to themselves, “Let us find out the truth about him.” So they asked him, “Brother, where do your kinsfolk live?” “In such and such a village,” replied Tissa. The monks accordingly sent a few novices there to investigate. The novices went there and asked the villagers who provided them with seats and food in the rest-house, “There is a novice named Tissa

¹ The Introductory Story is similar to the Introduction to Jātaka 80: i. 355–356. The Story of the Past, not given in full in the Dhammapada Commentary, is the same as Jātaka 125: i. 451–455. Text: N iii. 357–359.

who came from this village and retired from the world; who are his kinsfolk?" Thought the villagers, "There is no youth who has left any gentleman's household in this village and retired from the world; what are these novices saying?" So they said to the novices, "Reverend Sirs, we have heard of a certain gatekeeper's son who traveled with a company of carpenters and retired from the world; without doubt he is the novice you have reference to." When the young monks learned that Tissa had no kinsfolk of consequence there, they returned to Sāvatti and informed the monks what they had learned, saying, "Reverend Sirs, Tissa goes around chattering without sufficient cause." The monks reported the matter to the Tathāgata. Said the Teacher, "Monks, this is not the first time he has gone about uttering words of disparagement and empty boasting; in a previous state of existence also he was a braggart." Then, in response to a request of the monks, the Teacher related the following Story of the Past:¹

One may boast ever so much, living in a foreign land,
But another will follow and spoil it all; eat your food, therefore, Kaṭāhaka.

Having related this Kaṭāhaka Jātaka in detail, the Teacher said, "Monks, if any man is annoyed because others give either little or much, or coarse or fine food, or because they give nothing to him when he has given to others, [359] such a man will not attain Trance or Insight or the Paths and the Fruits." So saying, he preached the Law by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

249. People give according to their faith, according to their pleasure;
Whoever allows himself to be annoyed because food and drink are given to others,
Such a man will not attain Tranquillity either by day or by night.
250. But if a man will exterminate discontent, and tear it out by the roots, and utterly destroy it,
Then he will attain Tranquillity both by day and by night.

XVIII. 9. THE INATTENTIVE LAYMEN²

There is no fire like lust. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to five lay disciples. [360]

The story goes that these five men went to the monastery desiring to hear the Law, and having saluted the Teacher, sat down respectfully on one side. Now in the case of the Buddhas, no such thought ever enters their mind as the following, "This man is a Khattiya, this man is a Brahman, this is a rich man, this is a poor man; I will preach the Law to this man in such wise as to exalt him; I will not do so, however, in the case of this other man." It matters not with reference to what subject the Buddhas preach the Law. They place reverence for the Law before all else, and preach the Law as though they were bringing down the Celestial River from the sky.

¹ Jātaka 125: i. 451-455.

² Cf. Story xxvi. 25. Text: N iii. 360-363.

But though the Tathāgata preached the Law in this wise to the five men who sat about him, one of the five, even as he sat there, fell asleep, another sat and dug the earth with his finger, another sat and shook a tree, another gazed at the sky. Only one listened attentively to the Law. As Elder Ānanda stood there fanning the Teacher, he observed the conduct of the five men and said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, you are preaching the Law even as thunders the thunder which accompanies a heavy rain, but even as you preach the Law, these men sit doing this and that." "Ānanda, do you not know these men?" "No, Reverend Sir, I do not."

"Of these five men, he that sits there sound asleep, was reborn as a snake in five hundred states of existence, and in each of these states of existence laid his head in his coils and fell asleep; therefore at the present time also he is sound asleep; [361] not a sound I make enters his ear."

"But, Reverend Sir, tell me, was this in successive states of existence or at intervals?" "Ānanda, at one time this man was reborn as a human being, at another time as a god, and at another time as a snake. Indeed it would be impossible, even with the knowledge of omniscience, to determine exactly the number of times he has undergone rebirth at intervals. But in five hundred successive states of existence he was reborn as a snake and fell asleep; not even yet is he sated with sleep."

"The man who sits there scratching the earth with his finger was reborn in five hundred successive states of existence as an earthworm, and burrowed into the earth; hence he digs the earth at the present time also, and fails to hear my voice."

"The man who sits there shaking a tree was reborn in five hundred successive states of existence as a monkey, and from sheer force of habit acquired in previous states of existence, still continues to shake a tree, and the sound of my voice does not enter his ears."

"The Brahman who sits there gazing at the sky was reborn in five

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XVIII. 10. TREASURER RAM ¹

Easy to see are the flaws of another. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jātiyāvana near Bhaddiya with reference to Treasurer Ram. [363]

10 a. Frame-Story begun: The Buddha visits Treasurer Ram

As the Teacher journeyed through the country of the Aṅguttaras, he observed that the dispositions requisite for attaining the Fruit of Conversion were possessed by Treasurer Ram, and his wife Candapadumā, and his son Treasurer Dhanañjaya, and his daughter-in-law Sumanā Devī, and his granddaughter Visākhā, and his slave Puṇṇa. After making this observation he continued his journey to the city Bhaddiya, and took up his residence at Jātiyāvana. Treasurer Ram heard that the Teacher had arrived. [364] But how did Treasurer Ram get his name?

10 b. Digression: Treasurer Ram and his golden rams

Behind his house, the story goes, in a yard eight karīsas in extent, pranced up and down some golden rams as big as elephants or horses or bulls, cleaving the earth asunder, and smiting back with back. Now whenever Treasurer Ram had need of ghee or oil or honey or molasses or other kinds of food, or whenever he had need of garments or coverlets or gold bullion or gold coin or aught else, he would place balls of thread of the five colors in their mouths; and when he removed the ball from the mouth of even a single ram, there would come out of the mouth of that ram a supply of ghee and oil and honey and molasses and garments and coverlets and gold bullion and gold coin sufficient for all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple. This is how he came to be called Treasurer Ram. But what was his deed in a previous birth?

10 c. Story of the Past: How Treasurer Ram came to possess golden rams

It appears that in the dispensation of the Buddha Vipassī he was the nephew of a householder named Avaroja, and that he was himself named Avaroja after his uncle. Now the uncle undertook to build a Perfumed Chamber for the Teacher. And the nephew went to the uncle and said to him, "Uncle, let both of us join forces and build the Perfumed Chamber together." But this his uncle declined to do, saying to him, "I prefer not to share the work with others, but to build the Perfumed Chamber by myself unaided." Then the nephew thought to himself, "As soon as the Perfumed Chamber is erected here, an elephant-stable should be erected there." Accordingly he caused building-materials to be brought from the forest, and erected one pillar inlaid with gold, another pillar inlaid with silver, and another pillar inlaid with gems. In like manner all the pillars were inlaid with gold and silver and gems; and in like manner the pillars and the beams and doorways and windows and rafters and roof and tiles were inlaid with gold and silver and gems.

¹ Parallels: Vinaya, Mahā Vagga, v. 34: i. 240⁴-245⁷; Divyāvadāna, ix-x: 123-135. Text: N iii. 363-376.

Thus, on a site opposite the Perfumed Chamber, did he erect for the Tathāgata an elephant-stable, employing the seven precious minerals for the purpose. Over the elephant-stable was a potsherd of solid ruddy gold, and the peaks of the turrets were made of coral. [365] In the center of the elephant-stable he erected a jeweled pavilion; and beneath it he placed the Seat of the Law, whose feet were of solid ruddy gold and whose four uprights were likewise of solid ruddy gold. In addition, he wrought four golden rams and placed them beneath the feet of the Seat; and two golden rams, which he placed beneath the foot-rest; and six golden rams which he placed in a circle about the pavilion. The lower part of the Seat of the Law, he had woven with cords of thread, the middle part of threads of gold, and the upper part of silver threads. The back of the Seat was of sandalwood.

When he had thus completed the elephant-stable, he held a festival in honor of the opening of the stable, invited the Teacher, together with sixty-eight hundred thousand monks, gave alms for four months, and on the last day gave a set of three robes to each of the monks, the cost of the robes presented to each novice coming to a hundred thousand pieces of money. Having performed this work of merit in the dispensation of the Buddha Vipassī, he passed from this state of existence, and after undergoing birth and rebirth in the Worlds of the Gods and the world of men, he was reborn in this present dispensation at Benāres in the household of a treasurer possessed of great wealth, becoming known later as treasurer of Benāres.

10 d. Story of the Past: How Treasurer Ram and his family came to possess magical power

One day as he was on his way to the royal palace to wait upon the king, he met the king's house-priest and said to him, "Teacher, are you considering what the stars portend?" "I am indeed considering this; what else have we to do?" "Tell me then, how is the country faring?" "Some calamity is due to occur." [366] "What kind of calamity?" "Treasurer, there is to be a famine." "When will it happen?" "Three years hence." When the treasurer heard this, he caused more abundant crops to be sown than ever before, spent all the wealth he possessed buying grain, caused twelve hundred and fifty granaries to be erected, filled all the granaries with rice, and when the granaries were filled to overflowing, filled chatties and other vessels, and dumped the rest on the ground and buried it in a pit. What remained he mixed with clay and used to plaster walls.

When, some time later, the famine arrived, he made use of the grain which had been stored for this purpose; and when the grain which he had stored in granaries, chatties, and other vessels had been exhausted, he summoned the members of his retinue and said to them, "Dear friends, go into the mountains and there obtain sustenance. As soon as there is abundance of food once more, return to me, if you so desire. But if you do not wish to return, remain wherever you like." They did as he suggested.

Now the treasurer had a single steward, a slave named Puṇṇa, who remained behind with him. The treasurer's wife also remained behind with him, and so likewise did his son and his daughter-in-law, making five persons in all. [367] When the grain which had been buried in pits in the earth was exhausted, they tore down the clay walls, moistened the clay, and supported themselves on the grain taken therefrom. When the famine spread and the supply of clay was exhausted, the treasurer's wife broke in pieces the clay which still remained in the walls, moistened it, obtained from the clay half an ālhaka of rice, pounded it, and obtained therefrom a nāli of rice. Then thinking to herself, "In time of famine there are many thieves," for fear of thieves, she put the rice in a jar, closed the jar, and dug a hole in the earth and buried it.

When the treasurer returned from waiting upon the king, he said to his wife, "My dear wife, I am hungry; is there anything to eat?"

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

nāli of rice between us, and of the boiled rice prepared therefrom, this is one portion, and it is impossible to divide this in two. I ask you not to bestow a blessing upon me in this present world; I desire to give you all of the rice without reserve." With these words he gave him all of the rice, making the following Earnest Wish as he did so, "Reverend Sir, in the various places where I shall be reborn, may I never again behold such a famine as this. Henceforth may I have the means to give seed-rice to all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple. May I never be obliged to work for my living. Having caused my twelve hundred and fifty granaries to be swept, having bathed my head, having sat down at the doors of my granaries, at the moment when I look up, may a shower of ruddy rice fall from heaven and fill all my granaries. In the various places where I shall be reborn, may this very woman be my wife, this very youth my son, this very girl my daughter-in-law, and this very man my slave."

The treasurer's wife thought to herself, "It is out of the question for me to eat, so long as my husband is oppressed with hunger." So she gave her own portion to the Private Buddha, making the following Earnest Wish, "Reverend Sir, in the various places where I shall be reborn, may I never again behold such a famine as this. May I have the power, by setting before me a pint-pot of boiled rice, to give to all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple; and no matter how much I give, so long as I do not get up, may the pot be replenished with just as much boiled rice as has been taken out. May this very man be my husband, this very youth my son, this very girl my daughter-in-law, and this very man my slave."

The treasurer's son also gave his own portion of boiled rice to the Private Buddha, making the following Earnest Wish, "May I never again behold such a famine as this. May I have the power with a single purse of a thousand pieces of money to give money to all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple; and no matter how much I give, yet may this purse remain full. May this very woman and this very man be my mother and my father, this very woman be my wife, and this very man be my slave."

The treasurer's daughter-in-law also gave her own portion of boiled rice to the Private Buddha, making the following Earnest Wish, "May I never again behold such a famine. May I have the power, by setting a basket of grain before me, to give seed-rice to all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple; and no matter how much I give, yet may the grain in the basket remain undiminished. In the various places where I shall be reborn, may this very woman and this very man be my mother-in-law and my father-in-law, this very man be my husband, and this very man be my slave."

The slave also gave his own portion of boiled rice to the Private Buddha, making the following Earnest Wish, "May I never again behold such a famine. When I plow, may three furrows run on this side of me, three furrows on that side, and one in the midst, seven furrows in all, each an ammaṇa wide." Although the slave could have had the post of commander-in-chief on that day by wishing for it, [371] yet by reason of his affection for his mistress and his master, he made the following Earnest Wish, "May this very woman and this very man be my mistress and my master."

As each of these five persons concluded what he had to say, the Private Buddha said, "So be it," and pronounced the words of thanksgiving in the form of the Stanzas proper to a Private Buddha. Then, thinking to himself, "It is my duty to satisfy the longing of these living beings," he commanded, "May these living beings behold me until I reach Mount Gandhamādana." Straightway he soared away through the air, and they all stood and watched him. Having reached Mount Gandhamādana, he divided the boiled rice among five hundred Private Buddhas. By virtue of his supernatural power the boiled rice sufficed for all. The five persons still stood and watched.

When midday was past, the treasurer's wife washed the pot in which she had boiled the rice, placed the cover on it, and put it away. The treasurer, worn out with hunger, lay down and fell asleep. When it was evening, he awoke and said to his wife, "Dear wife, I am very hungry; are there no lumps of burnt rice sticking to the bottom of the pot?" Now his wife remembered very well that she had washed the pot and put it away, and knew that no rice remained. But for all that, she did not say, "There is none." On the contrary, she said, "I will uncover the pot and look and tell you." So saying, she rose from her seat, went to the closet where the pots were kept and removed the cover from the pot. Instantly the pot was filled with boiled rice possessing the fragrance of jasmine-buds; moreover the rice overflowed from the pot and thrust open the cover.

As soon as the treasurer's wife saw what had happened, her body was suffused with joy. Said she to her husband, "Rise, husband; I did indeed wash the pot and place the cover on it and put it away; but here it is filled with boiled rice possessing the fragrance of jasmine-buds. [372] It is worth while to do good deeds; it is worth while to give alms. Rise, husband, and eat.” So saying, she gave boiled rice to both father and son. When they had risen from their seats, she sat down and ate with her daughter-in-law. After that she gave boiled rice also to the slave Punṇa.

But in spite of the fact that rice was taken out of the boiler again and again, there was no diminution in the quantity of rice therein contained; as soon as one spoonful was taken out another spoonful appeared. On that day also the granaries and other receptacles were filled once more precisely as before. Thereupon the treasurer caused the following proclamation to be made throughout the city, “Rice has appeared in the treasurer’s house; let all those who require seed-rice come and take it.” Thereupon men came to the treasurer’s house and received seed-rice, all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple obtaining seed-rice at his hands.

The treasurer passed from that state of existence, and after passing through the round of birth and rebirth in the Worlds of the Gods and the world of men, was reborn in the dispensation of the present Buddha in the city Bhaddiya in the family of the treasurer. His wife was also reborn in a family possessed of great wealth, and when she arrived at marriageable age, was married once more to the treasurer. By reason of his former deed of merit, the rams described above came into existence in the yard back of his house. His son was his former son, his daughter-in-law his former daughter-in-law, and his slave his former slave.

10 e. Treasurer Ram and his family exhibit their magical power

One day the treasurer decided to test the power of his merit. Accordingly he caused his twelve hundred and fifty granaries to be swept clean, bathed his head, and sat down at the door of each of his granaries and looked up. Thereupon all of his granaries became filled with dusky rice of the kind before described. [373] Desiring to test the merit of the rest of his household also, he said to his wife and his son and his daughter-in-law and his slave, “You also test the power of your own merit.” So his wife adorned herself with all her adornments, and before the very eyes of the multitude, measured out a pint-pot of rice, boiled the rice, and sitting down at the gate in a seat made ready for her, took a golden spoon and proclaimed, “Let those approach who have need of boiled rice.” And she filled all the vessels presented to her, giving to all who came. All day long she

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

departed from his house. On the way he met a number of heretics who said to him, "Householder, how comes it that you, who believe in the Activity of Souls, go to the hermit Gotama, who does not?" Thus did the heretics seek to dissuade him from his purpose. But instead of paying any attention to them, he went and saluted the Teacher [375] and seated himself respectfully on one side. Thereupon the Teacher preached the Law to him in orderly sequence. At the conclusion of the Teacher's discourse the treasurer attained the Fruit of Conversion. He then informed the Teacher of the attempt of the heretics to turn him back by uttering dispraise of the Teacher. Said the Teacher, "Householder, as for these beings, they do not see their own fault, great though it be. Though the faults of others exist not, they talk of them as though they did exist. It is as though they were winnowing chaff." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, 252. Easy to see are the flaws of another, but hard to see are one's own.

For a man winnows the defects of others like chaff,
But covers his own, even as a dishonest gambler covers a losing throw.

XVIII. 11. THE FAULT-FINDING MONK ¹

If a man look to find flaws in another. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to an Elder named Fault-finder, Ujjhānasaññī. [376]

The story goes that this Elder used to go about finding fault with the monks, saying, "Thus does this monk put on his undergarment, thus does he put on his upper garment." The monks reported the matter to the Teacher, saying, "Reverend Sir, Elder So-and-so is doing thus and so." The Teacher replied, "Monks, he who attends strictly to whatever comes under the head of duty and admonishes others to do likewise, the same is not a faultfinder. But he who is minded to find fault, who seeks to find flaws in others, and who goes about talking accordingly, such a man will never attain a single one of the Specific Attainments such as Trance; only the Impurities increase within him." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

253. If a man look to find flaws in another, if he be minded ever to find fault,
The Impurities increase within him; such a man is far from Destruction of the Impurities.

¹ Text: N iii. 376-377.

XVIII. 12. IS THERE A PATH THROUGH THE AIR? ¹

There is no path through the air. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher with reference to the Wanderer Subhadda. It was while the Teacher was lying on the Bed of the Great Decease in the Sāl-forest of the Mallas at Upavattana in the city of Kusi-nārā. [377]

The story goes that in times long past, when Subhadda's younger brother gave alms nine times of the first-fruits of a certain crop, Subhadda himself had no desire to give alms and refused, but in the end did give alms. As the result of this, he failed to see the Teacher both in the First Period of Enlightenment and in the Second. In the Last Period of Enlightenment, however, when the Teacher was come to the time of the Great Decease, he thought to himself, "I have entertained doubts on three points and have asked the old monks to resolve my doubts for me. But because I have looked upon the monk Gotama as a novice, I have never asked him. [378] Now, however, the time of his Great Decease is come, and if I do not ask him now, I may be sorry hereafter." Accordingly he approached the Teacher.

Elder Ānanda sought to prevent him. But the Teacher gave him leave to approach, saying to the Elder, "Ānanda, do not keep Subhadda away; let him ask me his question." Therefore Subhadda entered within the curtain, seated himself at the foot of the bed, and asked the Teacher the following questions, "Sir monk, is there such a thing as a path through the air? Can one be called a monk who is an outsider? Are the Aggregates eternal?" Thereupon the Teacher informed him that these things have no real existence, expounding the Law in the following Stanzas,

254. There is no path through the air; no outsider is a monk;
Mankind delights in the Hindrances; the Tathāgatas are free from the Hindrances.

255. There is no path through the air; no outsider is a monk;
The Aggregates are not eternal; there is no variableness in the Buddhas.

¹ This story is derived from Dīgha, ii. 148-153. Here, as elsewhere, the redactor makes such alterations in the story as serve his purpose. Text: N iii. 377-379.

BOOK XIX. THE RIGHTEOUS, DHAMMATṬHA VAGGA

XIX. 1. THE UNJUST JUDGES ¹

Not therefore is a man called a justice. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the ministers of justice. [380]

For on a certain day the monks made their rounds for alms in a settlement at the north gate of Sāvatti, and returning from their pilgrimage to the monastery, passed through the center of the city. At that moment a cloud came up, and the rain began to fall. Entering a hall of justice opposite, they saw lords of justice taking bribes and depriving lawful owners of their property. Seeing this, they thought, “Ah, these men are unrighteous! Until now we supposed they rendered righteous judgments.” When the rain was over, they went to the monastery, saluted the Teacher, and sitting respectfully on one side, informed him of the incident. Said the Teacher, “Monks, they that yield to evil desires and decide a cause by violence, are not properly called justices; [381] they only that penetrate within a wrong and without violence render judgment according to the wrong committed, are properly called justices.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

256. Not therefore is a man called a justice because he decides a cause arbitrarily;
Nay rather is it he that inquires into both right and wrong, he that is wise.

257. He that leads others without violence, justly and righteously,
He that is protected of the Law, he that is intelligent, he alone is properly called a justice.

XIX. 2. THE BAND OF SIX ²

Not therefore is a man called wise for his much speaking. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the monks of the Band of Six. [382]

¹ Text: N iii. 380–382.

² Text: N iii. 382–384.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

are no persons here to listen to the Law.” “Yes, there are, Reverend Sirs; on a day when the Law is expounded, this forest-grove is filled with the noise of the shouts of applause of the deities.”

One of the Elders recited the Law and the other expounded the Law, but not even a single deity gave applause. Said the Elders, “Brother, you said to us, ‘On a day when the Law is expounded, the deities in this forest-grove give applause with a loud noise;’ what does this mean?” “Brethren, on other days there has been just such a noise; I do not know what is the matter to-day.” “Well then, brother, you just preach the Law.” Elder Ekuddāna took the fan, and sitting in his seat, pronounced that one Stanza. The deities shouted applause with a loud noise.

Now the twice five hundred attending monks were highly offended at the deities and said, “The deities in this forest-grove show respect of persons in giving applause. Though monks versed in the Tipiṭaka uttered so much of the Law, they gave not so much as a world of approval; but just because a certain old Elder recited a single Stanza, they shouted applause with a loud noise.” And going to the monastery, they reported the incident to the Teacher. [386] Said the Teacher, “Monks, I call not him versed in the Law who knows or utters much of the Law; but whosoever masters even a single Stanza and clearly understands the Truths, such a man is verily and indeed versed in the Law.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

259. Not therefore is a man versed in the Law for his much speaking.

But he that hears ever so little, and evidences his perception of the Law by his acts,

He is indeed versed in the Law, for he fails not to heed the Law.

XIX. 4. CAN A YOUNG MONK BE AN “ELDER”? ¹

Not therefore is a man an Elder. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Lakunṭaka Bhaddiya. [387]

For on a certain day this Elder went to wait upon the Teacher. As he departed, Thirty forest monks saw him. The monks went to the Teacher, saluted him, and sat down respectfully on one side. The Teacher, perceiving that they were ripe for Arahatsip, asked them

¹ Text: N iii. 387–388.

this question, "Did you see a certain Elder leave this place?" "No, Reverend Sir, we did not." "You did not?" "We saw a certain novice, Reverend Sir." "Monks, he was no novice; he was an Elder." "He was exceedingly young, Reverend Sir." "Monks, I do not call a man an Elder merely because he is old, because he sits in the seat of an Elder; but he who comprehends the Truths and is ever kind to others, he is an Elder indeed." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas, 260. Not therefore is a man an Elder because his head is gray;

Though he be ripe in years, yet he is called 'Old-in-vain.'"

261. That man in whom dwell truth, righteousness, non-injury, temperance, and self-control,
He that has rid himself of his faults and is steadfast, that man is truly called an Elder.

XIX. 5. WHAT IS AN ACCOMPLISHED GENTLEMAN? ¹

Not through eloquence. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a company of monks. [388]

For once upon a time certain Elders saw some young monks and novices dyeing robes and performing the other duties for their preceptors. Thereupon they said to themselves, "We ourselves are clever at putting words together, but for all that, receive no such attentions. Suppose [389] now we were to approach the Teacher and say to him, 'Reverend Sir, when it comes to the letter of the Sacred Word, we too are expert; give orders to the young monks and novices as follows, "Even though you have learned the Law from others, do not rehearse it until you have improved your acquaintance with it under these Elders."' Thus will our gain and honor increase."

Accordingly they approached the Teacher and said to him what they had agreed upon. The Teacher listened to what they had to say and became aware of the following, "In this Religion, according to tradition, it is entirely proper to say just this. However, these Elders seek only their own gain." So he said to them, "I do not consider you 'accomplished' merely because of your ability to talk. But that man in whom envy and other evil qualities have been uprooted by the Path of Arahatsip, he alone is truly accomplished.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

¹ Text: N iii. 388-390.

262. Not through eloquence or beauty of complexion
Is a man accomplished, if at the same time he be envious, niggardly, deceitful.
263. But he that has cut off and uprooted and removed all these faults,
He that has rid himself of hatred, he that is intelligent, such a man is rightly called accomplished.

XIX. 6. IT IS NOT TONSURE THAT MAKES THE MONK ¹

No tonsure can make a monk. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Hatthaka. [390]

The story goes that whenever Hatthaka was defeated in an argument, he would say, “Pray come to such and such a place at such and such a time, and we will resume the discussion.” He would then precede his opponent to the appointed place and say, “See! the heretics are so afraid of me that they dare not meet me; this is a confession of defeat on their part.” This and much else of the same sort he would say. These were the tactics he invariably employed with one opponent after another, whenever he met defeat. The Teacher, hearing that Hatthaka was doing thus and so, sent for him [391] and asked him, “Hatthaka, is the report true that you are doing thus and so?” “It is true,” replied Hatthaka. Then said the Teacher, “Why do you do so? A man who utters such falsehoods has no right to the name of monk merely because he goes about with his head tonsured. But he that conquers sins both small and great, is a monk indeed.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

264. No tonsure can make a monk of a man who is undisciplined, who speaks falsehood;
If a man be affected with desire and cupidity, how can he be a monk?
265. But he that overcomes sins both small and great, wholly and entirely,
He is rightly called, from victory over sins, a monk.

¹ Text: N iii. 390–391.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

thanksgiving to their hosts. At this the people were offended and said, "We hear words of thanksgiving and good wishes from the heretics, but the reverend monks depart in utter silence." The monks reported this matter to the Teacher.

Said the Teacher, "Monks, henceforth in refectories and other such places render thanks according to your good pleasure and speak pleasantly to your hosts as you sit beside them." Thus did the Teacher enjoin upon them the saying of thanksgivings, and they did according to his command. When the people heard the words of thanksgiving, they put forth the greater efforts, invited the monks to take meals in their houses, and went about bestowing abundant offerings upon them. Then were the heretics offended and said, "We are sages and keep silence, but the disciples of the monk Gotama deliver lengthy discourses in refectories and other such places." When the Teacher heard their remarks, he said, "Monks, I do not call a man a sage merely because he keeps silence. For there are some men who say nothing because of ignorance, others because of lack of confidence, while still others are so niggardly that they seek to prevent others from learning anything of importance which they themselves know. Therefore I say that a man is not called a sage merely because he keeps silence; rather is he called a sage because of suppression of evil." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas, 268. Not because of silence is a man a sage, if he be foolish and ignorant.

But the wise man who takes to himself truth, even as one grasps a pair of scales,

269. And rejects those things that are evil, such a man is a sage, and for this reason is a sage.

He that understands both worlds is therefore called a sage.

XIX. 9. NOBLE IS AS NOBLE DOES ¹

Not therefore is a man Noble. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain fisherman named Noble, Ariya. [397]

For once upon a day the Teacher, perceiving that this fisherman was ripe for Conversion, after making his alms-pilgrimage in a settlement near the north gate of Sāvatti, set out thence to return, accompanied by the Congregation of Monks. At that moment this fisherman was engaged in catching fish with hook and line. But when he saw the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, he threw away his fishing-pole and stood still. The Teacher halted not far from him, and turning about, asked Elder Sāriputta and the other Elders their names, saying, "What is your name?" "What is your name?" In reply the Elders told him their respective names, saying, "I am Sāriputta," "I am Moggallāna." Thereupon the fisherman thought to himself, "The Teacher asks the names of all the others; doubtless he will also ask me my name." The Teacher, knowing his wish, asked him, "Lay disciple, what is your name?" "Reverend Sir, my name is Noble," replied the fisherman. Then said the Teacher, "Lay disciple, men like you who take the lives of living beings are not to be called Noble. Nobles are rather those who never injure the multitude." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 396-398.

270. Not therefore is a man Noble because he injures living beings;
A Noble is so called because he never injures living beings.

XIX. 10. BE NOT PUFFED UP¹

Not merely because of religious practices. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to several virtuous monks. [398]

The story goes that some of these monks considered thus within themselves, "We have acquired virtue; we have taken upon ourselves the Pure Practices; we are exceedingly learned; we dwell in places of abode that are solitary and remote; we have developed the Supernatural Powers by Ecstatic Meditation. For us it would be no hard matter to attain Arahatsip; indeed we can attain Arahatsip any day we wish." Likewise those of the monks who had attained the Fruit of the Third Path, considered thus within themselves, "For us it would be no hard matter now to attain Arahatsip." One day all of them [399] approached the Teacher, saluted him, and seated themselves respectfully on one side.

The Teacher asked them, "But, monks, have you brought your religious duties to consummation?" The monks replied, "Reverend Sir, we have attained such and such degrees of sanctity. Therefore, whenever we wish, we are able to attain Arahatsip. With this thought in our minds, we keep residence." When the Teacher heard their reply, he said, “Monks, it is never proper for a monk, merely because he has kept the precepts whole and undefiled, or because he has attained the bliss of the Third Path, to think, ‘But little suffering is involved in our present existence.’ On the contrary, not until he has attained Destruction of the Depravities, should he allow himself to think, ‘I have attained true bliss.’” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

¹ Text: N iii. 398-400.

- 271. Not merely because of religious practices, nor yet because of much learning, Neither because of attainment of Tranquillity, nor because of living solitary and remote,
- 272. Win I the Bliss of Release, incapable of attainment by worldlings.
 Monk, rest not content until thou hast attained Destruction of the Depravities.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XX. 2. IMPERMANENCE ¹

“Impermanent are all existing things.” This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to five hundred monks. [405]

The story goes that these five hundred monks, who had received a Subject of Meditation from the Teacher and who had striven and struggled with might and main in the forest without attaining Arahatsip, returned to the Teacher for the purpose of obtaining a Subject of Meditation better suited to their needs. The Teacher inquired within himself, “What will be the most profitable Subject of Meditation for these monks?” Then he considered within himself, “In the dispensation of the Buddha Kassapa these monks devoted themselves for twenty thousand years to meditation on the Characteristic of Impermanence; therefore the Characteristic of Impermanence shall be the subject of the single Stanza which I shall pronounce.” And he said to them, “Monks, in the sphere of sensual existence and in the other spheres of existence all the Aggregates of Existence are by reason of unreality impermanent.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

277. “Impermanent are all existing things.”
With wisdom who perceives this fact,
Straightway becomes contemptuous of suffering.
This is the Way of Salvation.

XX. 3. SUFFERING ²

[The story relating to the Second Stanza is the same.] [406]

On this occasion the Exalted One, knowing that these monks had devoted themselves to meditation on the Characteristic of Suffering, said to them, “Monks, all the Elements of Being press hard upon us, and are therefore occasions of suffering.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

278. “Involved in suffering are all existing things.”
With wisdom who perceives this fact,
Straightway becomes contemptuous of suffering.
This is the Way of Salvation.

¹ Text: N iii. 405–406.

² Text: N iii. 406.

XX. 4. UNREALITY¹

[So also goes the story relating to the Third Stanza.]

Only on this occasion the Exalted One, knowing that in a previous state of existence these monks had devoted themselves to meditation on the Characteristic of Unreality, said to them, "Monks, the Elements of Being are not self-determining, and are therefore unreal." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [407]

279. "Unreal are all existing things."

With wisdom who perceives this fact,
Straightway becomes contemptuous of suffering.
This is the Way of Salvation.

XX. 5. DO NOT POSTPONE UNTIL TO-MORROW²

He that rises not when it is time to rise. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Padhānakammika Tissa.

The story goes that five hundred youths of Sāvatti retired from the world, became monks under the Teacher, obtained a Subject of Meditation from the Teacher, and withdrew to the forest. One of them fell away then and there, but the rest performed their meditations with such diligence that they attained Arahatsip. Thereupon they returned once more to the Teacher to inform him of the blessing they had received. Now as they were going their rounds for alms in a village only a league from Sāvatti, a certain lay disciple saw them, honored them with offerings of rice-gruel, boiled rice, and other kinds of food, and after listening to the words of thanksgiving which they pronounced, invited them to be his guests for the following day.

On that same day [408] they went to Sāvatti, put away their bowls and robes, and in the afternoon approached the Teacher, saluted him, and sat down. The Teacher expressed great pleasure at seeing them and exchanged friendly greetings with them. Thereupon the monk who had been their fellow and had there fallen away thought to himself, "The Teacher lacks sufficient words with which to exchange friendly greetings with these monks. But to me, since I have not attained the Paths and the Fruits, he vouchsafes never a word. I will attain Arahathship this very day, and having so done, will approach the Teacher and cause him to speak to me."

¹ Text: N iii. 406-407.

² This story is an abbreviated version of Jātaka 71: i. 316-319. Text: N iii. 407-410.

The monks took leave of the Teacher, saying, "Reverend Sir, as we were on our way hither, we were invited by a certain lay disciple to be his guests on the morrow. To-morrow, early in the morning, we shall go thither." As for their fellow-monk, he spent the entire night walking up and down. Finally, overcome by drowsiness, he stumbled against a certain stone seat at the end of the cloister and broke his thigh-bone, whereupon he screamed with a loud noise. His fellow-monks, recognizing the sound of his voice, ran hither and thither in great confusion. They lighted a light and rendered him such assistance as he needed. But even as they were ministering to his needs, the sun rose, and the result was that they had no opportunity to go to the village.

Said the Teacher to them, "Monks, did you not go to the village to receive the promised offerings?" "No, Reverend Sir," replied the monks, and told him of the incident. Then said the Teacher, "Monks, [409] this is not the first time he has prevented you from receiving promised offerings; he did the same thing also in a previous state of existence." Then, in compliance with a request of the monks, the Teacher related the following Story of the Past:¹

Whoever postpones until afterwards the doing of duties that should be done before, Repents afterwards, like the man who broke the green twigs of the Varāṇa-tree.

Having related the Jātaka in detail, the Teacher said, "At that time these monks were the five hundred youths, the lazy youth was this monk, and the teacher was the Tathāgata." In concluding his lesson the Teacher said, "Monks, whoever does not rise when it is time to rise, whoever is weak of will and indolent, such a man never develops Trance^o or any other of the Specific Attainments." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

280. He that rises not when it is time to rise, young, strong, given over to laziness,
Weak of will and thought, indolent, such a lazy man finds not the path to wisdom.

¹ Jātaka 71: i. 317-319.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

6 a. Story of the Past: The destroyer of friendships

The story goes that in the dispensation of the Buddha Kassapa there were two Elders who lived together in peace and harmony in a certain village monastery. One of them was sixty years of age, [412] and the other was fifty-nine. The younger used to carry the bowl and robe of the older and accompany him about; in fact he used to perform all the major and minor duties like a novice. Like two brothers sprung from the womb of the same mother, they lived together in peace and harmony.

One day a certain preacher of the Law came to their place of residence. Now it was the day appointed for the hearing of the Law. The two Elders offered hospitality to the visitor and said to him, "Good man, preach the Law to us." So he preached the Law to them. Their hearts were gladdened at the thought, "We have gained a preacher."

On the following day, taking him with them, they entered a neighboring village for alms. When they had finished their breakfast, they said to him, "Brother, preach the Law for a little while, beginning at the point where you stopped yesterday." Thus did they cause him to preach the Law to the people. The people, after listening to his preaching of the Law, invited him for the following day also. In this manner they made an alms-pilgrimage in all the villages round about where they were accustomed to receive alms, taking him with them and spending two days in each.

The preacher of the Law thought to himself, "These two Elders are exceedingly soft. I may just as well drive both of them away and take up my residence in this monastery myself." In the evening he went to wait upon the Elders. When it was time for the monks to rise and go, he returned, approached the senior Elder, and said, "Reverend Sir, there is something I ought to say to you." "Say it, brother," replied the senior Elder. The preacher of the Law thought a little and then said, "Reverend Sir, what I have to say carries with it severe censure." And without telling a thing he departed, going immediately to the junior Elder and acting in precisely the same manner.

On the second day he did the same thing again. On the third day [413] the two Elders were agitated beyond measure. The preacher of the Law approached the senior Elder and said to him, "Reverend Sir, there is something I ought to say, but I dare not say it in your presence." But the Elder pressed him for a reply, saying,

“Never mind, brother; say what you have to say.” Finally the preacher of the Law said, “But, Reverend Sir, has the junior Elder anything to do with you?”

“Good man, what say you? We are like sons sprung from the womb of the same mother; whatever one of us receives, the other receives also; all this time I have never seen a single thing in him that is wrong.” “Is that so, Reverend Sir?” “That is so, brother.” “Reverend Sir, this is what the junior Elder said to me: ‘Good man, you are of gentle birth, but as for this senior Elder, if you intend to have anything to do with him, and if you believe him to be modest and amiable, you had better look out.’ And this he has said repeatedly to me ever since the day I came here.”

When the senior Elder heard these words, his heart was filled with anger. Indeed he was shattered even as a potter’s vessel is shattered when struck with a stick. Then the preacher of the Law arose from where he sat, went to the junior Elder, and said the same thing to him. The junior Elder was shattered just as the senior Elder had been before him. Now although during all the years they had lived together neither of them had entered the village singly to receive alms, on the following day the junior Elder entered the village alone to receive alms, preceding his brother, and stopping at the Hall of State, while the senior Elder followed after.

When the junior Elder saw his brother, he thought to himself, “Ought I to take his bowl and robe or not?” [414] “I will not take them now,” he decided. But no sooner had he done so than the thought came to him, “Hold! I have never done such a thing before. I ought not to omit my duty.” So softening his heart, he approached the Elder and said to him, “Reverend Sir, give me your bowl and robe.” Said the senior Elder, “Begone, you miscreant. You are not fit to take my bowl and robe.” So saying, he snapped his fingers in contempt. Then said the junior Elder, “Yes, Reverend Sir, I also thought to myself, ‘I will not take your bowl and robe.’” Said the senior Elder, “Brother novice, do you think that I have any attachment for this monastery?” Said the junior Elder, “But, Reverend Sir, do you suppose that I have any attachment for this monastery? This is your monastery.” So saying, he took bowl and robe and departed. Likewise the senior Elder departed. Instead of going out together, one of the Elders went out by the western door and went his way, while the other went out by the eastern door and went his way. The preacher of the Law said to them, “Do not so.” The Elders replied, "You remain, brother." So the preacher of the Law remained.

When the preacher of the Law entered the neighboring village on the following day, people asked him, "Reverend Sir, where are the reverend monks?" "Brethren, do not ask me," replied the preacher of the Law. "The monks [415] who used to resort to your houses had a quarrel yesterday and left the monastery. I tried to prevent them from going, but was unable to do so." Now some of the people were simpletons and they remained silent. But others who were wise said, "During all this time we have never seen anything you might call a quarrel between the two reverend monks; if they have been frightened away, they must have been frightened away by this newcomer." And they were deeply affected with grief.

As for the Elders, no matter where they went, they were unable to secure peace of mind. The senior Elder thought to himself, "Oh, what a grievous wrong it was that the novice did! The moment he saw this visiting monk, he said to him, 'Have nothing to do with the senior Elder.'" Likewise the junior Elder thought to himself, "Oh, what a grievous wrong it was that the senior Elder did! The moment he saw this visiting monk, he said to him, 'Have nothing to do with this junior monk.'" They were unable either to rehearse the Sacred Word or to fix their attention.

After a hundred years had passed, both of them came to the same monastery in the western country and both received the same quarters. No sooner had the senior Elder entered and taken his seat on the bed, than the junior Elder came in. As soon as the senior Elder saw him, he recognized him and could not restrain his tears. The junior recognized the senior and with tear-filled eyes thought, "Shall I speak, or shall I not speak?" Then thinking, "That was not worthy of belief," he saluted the Elder and said, "Reverend Sir, [416] in all the time during which I took your bowl and robe and accompanied you about, did you ever know me to do anything improper in thought, word, or deed?" "No, brother, I never did." "Then why did you say to the preacher of the Law, 'Have nothing to do with this man'?" "Brother, I never said such a thing. I was told, however, that you said that very thing about me." "Reverend Sir, neither did I ever say such a thing."

At that moment they both realized, "He must have said this to cause a breach between us;" and each confessed his transgression against the other. So it happened that on that day two Elders, who

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

five hundred monks, eighteen great companies. Yet the Teacher addresses me always as Poṭhila the Empty-head, Tucchapoṭhila. It is doubtless because I have not developed the Trances that the Teacher thus addresses me." Much stirred up, he said to himself, "I will straightway enter the forest and engage in meditation." Accordingly that very evening he put bowl and robe in order, and when it was dawn, set out, accompanying the monk who was the last of all to master the Law. The monks who sat in their cells repeating the Law did not notice that it was their teacher.

Poṭhila went a distance of a hundred and twenty leagues, finally arriving at a forest hermitage where thirty monks resided. Approaching the monks, he saluted the Elder of the community and said to him, "Reverend Sir, be my refuge." "Brother, you are a preacher of the Law; it is we [419] who have something to learn from you. Why do you speak thus?" "Reverend Sir, do not act thus; be my refuge." As a matter of fact, all of those monks were Arahats. The senior Elder thought to himself, "This monk, by reason of great learning, is affected with pride," and therefore sent him to a junior Elder. Poṭhila said the same thing to the junior Elder. In like manner each of the monks sent him to his junior; finally they sent him to the youngest of all, a seven-year-old novice, who was sitting in his day-quarters doing needlework. Thus did they humble his pride.

His pride humbled, Poṭhila raised his clasped hands in an attitude of reverent supplication to the novice and said to him, "Good Sir, be my refuge." "Oh, teacher," replied the novice, "what say you? You are of mature age and of great learning; it is I who have something to learn from you." "Do not act thus, good sir; only be my refuge." "Reverend Sir, if you will patiently endure admonition, I will be your refuge." "I will do so, good sir; if you say to me, 'Enter the fire,' I will enter the fire." Thereupon the novice pointed out a pool of water not far off and said to him, "Reverend Sir, plunge into this pool, robes and all." For although the novice knew full well that Poṭhila had on under and upper garments of great value, robes of double fold, [420] he spoke thus to ascertain whether he was tractable or not. No sooner were the words spoken than the Elder plunged into the water.

When the novice saw that the skirts of Poṭhila's robes were dripping he said, "Come hither, Reverend Sir." No sooner did the novice speak than Poṭhila came and stood before him. Said the novice to Pothila, "Reverend Sir, if there are six holes in a given ant-hill, and a lizard enters the ant-hill by one of these holes, he that would catch the lizard stops up five of the six holes, leaving the sixth hole open, and catches the lizard in the hole by which he entered. Precisely so should you deal with the six doors of the senses; close five of the six doors, and devote your attention to the door of the mind."

To the monk, learned as he was, the words of the novice were as the lighting of a lamp. "Let that suffice, good sir," said he; and concentrating his attention on the material body, he began to meditate. The Teacher, even as he sat at a distance of a hundred and twenty leagues, surveyed that monk, and thinking to himself, "This monk must so establish himself as to become a man of great wisdom," sent forth a luminous image of himself, which went and spoke with the monk, as it were, pronouncing the following Stanza,

282. From meditation springs wisdom; from lack of meditation, wisdom dwindles away.

He that knows this twofold path of gain and loss

Should so settle himself that wisdom may increase. [421]

At the conclusion of the Stanza Pothila was established in Arahatship.

XX. 8. THE OLD MONKS AND THE OLD WOMAN¹

Cut down the forest. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a company of old monks.

The story goes that in the days when they were living in the world they were rich and wealthy householders of Sāvatti. Intimate friends one of another, they banded themselves together for the performance of good works. Hearing the Teacher preach the Law, they said to themselves, "We are old men; why should we remain laymen any longer?" Accordingly they asked the Teacher to admit them to the Order, and retiring from the world, adopted the monastic life. Now by reason of their advanced years they were unable to learn the Law by heart, and therefore built a hermitage of leaves and grass on the outskirts of the monastery, and lived there together. On their alms-pilgrimages they generally went to the houses of their sons and wives and there took their meals. [422]

¹ This story is almost word for word the same as Jātaka 146: i. 497-499. Text: N iii. 421-425.

Now one of the old monks had a former wife named Madhurapācīkā, and she was a good friend to them all. Therefore they all used to take the food they received to her house, and sit down there and eat it, and Madhurapācīkā would give them of her store of sauces and curries. In the course of time she was attacked by some disease or other and died. Thereupon those aged Elders assembled in the hut of one of their fellow Elders, and falling on each other's necks, wept and lamented, saying, "Madhurapācīkā the lay disciple is dead." Thereupon the monks came running up from all quarters and asked, "Brethren, what is the matter?" The old monks replied, "Reverend Sirs, the former wife of our comrade is dead. She was a most generous benefactress of ours. Where shall we ever find another like her now? That is why we are weeping."

The monks fell to discussing the incident in the Hall of Truth. In came the Teacher and asked, "Monks, what are you discussing now, as you sit here all gathered together?" When they told him, he said, "Monks, this is not the first time they have so conducted themselves; the same thing happened in a previous state of existence also."

8 a. Story of the Past: Kāka Jātaka

"In a previous state of existence they were all reborn as crows. As she was walking along the shore of the sea, a wave of the sea picked her up and flung her into the sea, and there she perished, whereupon they all wept and lamented. [423] 'We will pull her out again,' said they, and forthwith set to work with their beaks to bale out the great ocean; finally they wearied of their task."

Our jaws are tired, our mouths are parched.

We try, but cannot lower. The great ocean fills right up again.

After the Teacher had related this Kāka Jātaka in detail,¹ he addressed the monks as follows, "Monks, inasmuch as you have incurred this suffering because of the forest of lust, hatred, and delusion, it behooves you to cut down this forest; by so doing you will obtain Release from Suffering." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

283. Cut down the forest, not alone a single tree, for from the forest springs fear;
Cut down the forest of lust and its undergrowth, monks, and ye shall be free from lust.

¹ Jātaka 146: i. 497–499.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

him the whole story, saying, "Reverend Sir, this young monk is a co-resident of mine, and in this wise I taught him this Subject of Meditation." The Teacher said to him, "As for knowledge of thoughts and inclinations, this is a power appertaining only to the Buddhas, to those that fulfilled the Perfections and obtained Omniscience, causing the ten thousand worlds to shout for joy."

Then the Teacher pondered within himself, "From what family did this youth retire to become a monk?" Perceiving that it was from the family of the goldsmith, the Teacher surveyed the previous states of existence of the youth and saw that in five hundred successive states of existence that youth had been reborn in the family of that goldsmith only. Thought the Teacher to himself, "For a long period of time this youth has done the work of a goldsmith; many a time, saying, 'I will make kaṇikāra-flowers and lotus-flowers,' he has wrought only ruddy gold. Meditation on repulsive and disagreeable objects is not suited to him; a pleasant subject is the only Subject of Meditation appropriate to his case." So the Teacher said to Elder Sāriputta, "Sāriputta, as for this monk to whom you assigned a Subject of Meditation, and who was wearied and oppressed therewith for a period of four months, you will see him attain Arahatsip this very day, after breakfast. Go your way." So saying, the Teacher dismissed Elder Sāriputta. [427]

Thereupon the Teacher created by supernatural power a golden lotus as big as a cart-wheel, caused the leaves thereof and the stalks thereof to drip drops of water, and gave this lotus to the young monk, saying, "Monk, take this lotus-flower, go to the boundary of the monastery, and set it up on a heap of sand. Then sit down cross-legged before it, and by way of preliminary practice, repeat the words, 'Blood-red! blood-red!'" In the very act of taking the lotus-flower from the hand of the Teacher, his heart became tranquil.

The young monk went to the boundary of the monastery, made a heap of sand, thrust the stalk of the lotus into it, and sitting down cross-legged before it, began the preliminary practice, saying, "Blood-red! blood-red!" At that moment the Obstacles vanished, and the Preliminary Trance set in. Thereupon he developed the First Trance, and bringing it under control by the Five Modes, even as he sat there, attained the Second and the Third Trance. When he had brought the Fourth Trance under control, he sat there diverting himself with the diversion of the trance. The Teacher, aware that he had entered upon the Trances, considered within himself, "Will he, by himself unaided, succeed in developing Specific Attainment to the uttermost?” Perceiving that he would not be able so to do, he commanded, “Let this lotus-flower wither.” Straightway that lotus-flower turned as black as a withered lotus crushed in the hands.

The young monk, arising from trance and surveying the flower, thought to himself, “How is it that this lotus-flower appears as though smitten by old age? If those things which have no attachment for the world are thus overpowered by old age, there is no question at all that beings attached to the world will be similarly overpowered.” Thus did he come to see the Mark of Impermanence. [428] And so soon as he saw the Mark of Impermanence, he saw likewise the Mark of Suffering and the Mark of Unreality. And straightway the three Characteristics of Existence appeared to him as though set on fire, or as carrion tied to his neck.

At that moment a party of young boys descended into a certain pool not far from him, broke off lotus-flowers, and made a pile of them on the bank. The young monk looked first at the lotus-flowers in the water and then at those which lay on the bank. The lotus-flowers in the water appeared to him exceedingly beautiful as they raised their heads aloft dripping with water; those that lay on the bank were withered at the tips. Thought the young monk to himself, “If old age thus smites those things which have no attachment for the world, is it not much more likely to smite beings who have attachment for the world?” Then did he see yet more clearly the Marks of Impermanence, Suffering, and Unreality.

The Teacher perceived within himself, “Now is the Subject of his Meditation fully manifested to this monk.” And even as he sat in the Perfumed Chamber, he sent forth a luminous image of himself which brushed the young monk’s face. “What was that?” thought the young monk. Looking about, he seemed to see the Teacher approach and stand face to face with him. Rising from his seat, he extended his clasped hands in an attitude of reverent supplication. The Teacher, minded to do him good, pronounced the following Stanza, 285. Cut off the love of self, even as you would break off an autumnal lotus with your hand.

Advance along the Path to Tranquillity. The Happy One has pointed the way to Nibbāna. [429]

At the conclusion of the lesson that monk was established in Arahatsip.

XX. 10. THOU SHALT SURELY DIE ¹

Here I will dwell during the rain. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Merchant Great-Wealth, Mahādhana.

The story goes that he loaded five hundred carts with cloths dyed with safflower, and set out from Benāres to trade. When, on his return to Sāvatti, he reached the bank of the river, he thought, "To-morrow I will cross the river," and unyoked his carts right there and spent the night. During the night a severe storm came up and all night long it rained. For seven days the river was at flood; for seven days the citizens kept holiday. The result was that the merchant had no opportunity to dispose of his crimson cloths. Thought the merchant to himself, "I have come a long distance and if I go back again I shall be delayed; right here will I dwell during the rain, during the winter and summer, [430] doing my work and selling these cloths."

As the Teacher made his alms-pilgrimage through the city, he became aware of the merchant's intention and smiled. Thereupon Elder Ānanda asked him why he smiled. The Teacher replied, "Ānanda, did you see Merchant Great-Wealth?" "Yes, Reverend Sir." "Not realizing that the end of his life is near, he has made up his mind to dwell right here during this entire year for the purpose of selling his goods." "But Reverend Sir, is the end of his life at hand?" "Yes, Ānanda; only seven days longer will he live and then he will fall into the mouth of a fish." So saying, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanzas, Bestir yourself, and do what should be done this very day. Who knows but on the morrow death may come?

For are we not ever in conflict with Death and his mighty host?

Happy is the man who lives thus zealous by day and by night, unwearied, Though he live but a single night. Thus proclaims the tranquil sage.

"Reverend Sir, I will go tell him." "By all means go, Ānanda." The Elder went to the inclosure formed by the carts and made his round for alms. The merchant reverently presented him with food. Then said the Elder to the merchant, "How long a time do you expect to remain here?" "Reverend Sir, I have come a long distance, and

¹ Text: N iii. 429-431.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

For at that time the Teacher said, "Kisā Gotamī, didst thou get the pinch of white mustard-seed?" "Nay, Reverend Sir, that did I not. In the entire village the dead are more in number than the living." Then said the Teacher, "Vainly didst thou imagine that thou alone hadst lost a child. But this is an eternal law for all beings. For the Prince of Death, like to a raging torrent, drags along and flings into the sea of ruin all living beings; still are their longings unfulfilled." So saying, he preached the Law by pronouncing the following Stanza,

287. If a man be passionately devoted to sons or flocks and herds, if his mind be completely absorbed therein,
The Prince of Death will take and bear him away, even as a raging torrent sweeps away a sleeping village. [433]

At the conclusion of the lesson Kisā Gotamī was established in the Fruit of Conversion; the assembled company also profited by the lesson.

XX. 12. THE WOMAN WHO WAS BEREFT OF ALL HER FAMILY¹

Homa are no refuge. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Paṭācārā.

The story of Paṭācārā is contained in the Sahassa Vagga and is related in detail in the Commentary on Stanza

118. Though one should live a hundred years and never see the rise and set of beings,
Yet were it better far to live but a single day and see the rise and set of beings.²

Now at that time the Teacher, perceiving that the sorrow of Paṭācārā was unminged, said to her, "Paṭācārā, to one that goeth to the world beyond, nor sons nor father nor kinsfolk can ever be a refuge or a shelter or a retreat. Therefore, even though they live, they exist not. But he that is wise should clarify his virtue; so should he make clear the path that leads to Nibbāna." So saying, he preached the Law by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

288. Homa are no refuge, nor a father, nor kinsfolk;
There is no refuge in kinsfolk, for one who has been overtaken by Death.

¹ Text: N III, 434 435.

² See Story viii. 12.

289. The man who is wise, who lives under the restraint of the moral law, understanding this power of circumstances, Should quickly clear the path to Nibbāna. [435]

At the conclusion of the lesson Paṭācārā was established in the Fruit of Conversion; many others likewise obtained the Fruit of Conversion and the Fruits of the Second and Third Paths.

XXI. 1. THE ASCENT OF THE GANGES ¹

If by renouncing some trifling pleasure. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to his own former deed. [436]

For once upon a time the city Vesāli was a city of splendor and magnificence and great wealth; numerous were the folk that dwelt therein, and the streets thereof were thronged with inhabitants; therein resided seven thousand and seven hundred and seven princes of the Khattiyas, who reigned by turns. Each of the seven thousand and seven hundred and seven princes was provided with a separate place of residence; so many palaces were there, so many pagodas, and, that each might take his pleasure out of doors, so many parks and pools. But after a time the supply of food gave out and the crops failed and a famine ensued. As a result of the famine, first the poorer inhabitants died; and when their corpses were cast away here and there, the stench was so great as to attract large numbers of evil spirits. Afflicted by the evil spirits, a yet larger number of the inhabitants died; [437] and so offensive was the stench of their corpses that the inhabitants were attacked by intestinal disease. Thus did three plagues arise: the plague of famine, the plague of evil spirits, and the plague of disease.

Thereupon the inhabitants of the city met together and said to the king, "Great king, three plagues have arisen in this city; during the reigns of the past seven kings no such plagues as these have arisen; no such plagues as these have arisen in the past during the reign of any righteous king." So the king convoked a general assembly in the town-hall and said, "Whether there be any unrighteousness in me, judge ye." Thereupon the inhabitants of Vesāli inquired into ¹ This story is taken almost word for word from Khuddaka Pāṭha Commentary, vi: 160²²–165¹⁰, 196²²–201⁶. Kh. cm. 163^{19–21} and 164² are lacking in Dh. cm. Dh. cm. iii. 443⁶–444²¹ is more diffuse than Kh. cm. 197^{9–21}. The author of Kh. cm. says of the story (164^{16–17}): This version is taken from older Commentaries, Evam . . . porāṇehi vaṇṇiyati. Cf. Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 242–244; also Mahāvastu, i: 253 ff. Text: N iii. 436–449.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

When King Bimbisāra heard that the Teacher had consented to visit Vesāli, he caused the news to be proclaimed throughout the city, and approaching the Teacher, asked him, “Reverend Sir, is it true that you have consented to visit Vesāli?” “Yes, great king,” replied the Teacher. “In that case, Reverend Sir,” said the king, “pray wait until I prepare a road for you.” So the king caused the ground from Rājagaha to the Ganges, a distance of five leagues, to be made smooth, erected a rest-house at the end of each league, and when everything was in readiness, sent word to the Teacher that it was time for him to come. The Teacher set out on his journey, accompanied by five hundred monks.

Each league of the journey the king caused flowers of the five colors to be spread knee-deep, and flags and banners and standards to be set up; he caused two white parasols, a lower and a higher, to be held over the head of the Exalted One; likewise he caused a white parasol to be held over the head of each monk. And surrounded by his retinue, he honored the Teacher with flowers and perfumes, and lodged him for one night in each rest-house, bestowing rich offerings upon him. In five days he conducted him to the bank of the Ganges. So soon as the king reached the bank of the Ganges, he adorned a boat and sent the following message to the inhabitants of Vesāli, “Let them prepare a road and come forth to meet the Teacher.” Thereupon the inhabitants of Vesāli thought, “We will render the Teacher twice the honors rendered by the king.” So between Vesāli and the Ganges, a distance of three leagues, [440] they made the ground smooth, and procuring parasols both lesser and greater, they prepared to honor the Teacher with four white parasols, and each of his monks with two. Having made these preparations, they came forth and stood waiting on the bank of the Ganges.

King Bimbisāra fastened two boats together, erected a pavilion thereon, festooned the pavilion with flowers, and prepared for the Buddha a seat of all kinds of jewels. The Exalted One seated himself therein, and when the monks embarked, they too sat down in a circle around him. The king followed the float, descending into the water to his neck. Then he said, “Reverend Sir, until the Exalted One returns, I shall remain right here on the bank of the Ganges.” So saying, he pushed off the float and turned back. Having voyaged a distance of a league up the Ganges, the Teacher reached the boundary of the territories of the Vesāliyas.

The Licchavi princes came forth to meet the Teacher, and entering into the water up to their necks, they drew the vessel to the bank and assisted the Teacher to disembark from the vessel. The moment the Teacher disembarked from the vessel and set foot on the ground, a severe storm came up and there was a heavy fall of rain. Everywhere flowed streams of water knee-deep or thigh-deep or waist-deep, and washed all the corpses into the Ganges, so that the whole region round about was cleansed and made pure and sweet. The Licchavi princes lodged the Teacher at intervals of a league along the road, bestowing upon him twice the offerings bestowed upon him by the king. In three days [441] they conducted him to Vesāli.

Sakka king of the gods drew near, accompanied by a troop of deities. With the gathering together of deities so powerful, the evil spirits fled, for the most part. In the evening the Teacher stood at the gate of the city and addressed the Elder Ānanda as follows, “Ānanda, receive from me this Jewel Sutta and recite it as Protection within the three walls of the city Vesāli, making the rounds of the city with the Licchavi princes.” The Elder received the Jewel Sutta from the lips of the Teacher, took water in the Teacher’s stone bowl, and then went and took his stand at the gate of the city. And standing there, he meditated on all the Merits of the Buddha, beginning with his Resolve; considering in turn the Ten Perfections of the Tathāgata, the Ten Minor Perfections, and the Ten Major Perfections; the Five Great Sacrifices; the Three Meritorious Acts, in behalf of the world, in behalf of his kinsmen, and for the sake of Enlightenment; his Descent into the Womb in the last state of his existence; his Birth; the Great Retirement, the Great Exertion, his conquest of Māra on the throne of Enlightenment, his attainment of Omniscience, and the Nine Transcendent Conditions. And when he had so done, he entered the city and during the three watches of the night went about within the three walls of the city reciting the Jewel Sutta as Protection.

The moment he uttered the word “Whatsoever” (stanza 3) and threw the water upwards, it fell upon the evil spirits. From the third stanza on, drops of water resembling tiny balls of silver rose into the air and fell upon the sick men. Straightway the sickness of those men was cured, and rising to their feet in all quarters, they surrounded the Elder. [442] So soon as the word “Whatsoever” was uttered, the evil spirits who formerly infested such places as heaps of firebrands and piles of sweepings and pinnacles and walls, touched by the drops of water, strove to escape by one door after another. Now although there were many thousand doors, there was not room enough for them to escape by the doorways, and therefore they broke down the walls and thus made their escape.

The populace smeared the town-hall which stood in the midst of the city with all the perfumes, and erected overhead a canopy adorned with golden stars and other ornaments, and having prepared a Seat for the Buddha, announced to the Teacher that all things were in readiness. So the Teacher seated himself in the Seat prepared for him, and the Congregation of Monks and the host of Licchavi princes sat down in a circle about the Teacher, and Sakka king of the gods, surrounded by a company of deities, stood in a suitable place. The Elder went about the entire city, returned with a great multitude whose diseases had been cured, and having saluted the Teacher, sat down. The Teacher surveyed the company and recited the Jewel Sutta once more. At its close, eighty-four thousand living beings obtained Comprhension of the Law. Thus in like manner on the following day and for seven days thereafter he recited the same Sutta. And then, perceiving that all the plagues had been abated, he addressed himself to the host of Licchavi princes, and departed from Vesāli. The Licchavi princes rendered double honors to the Teacher, and again in three days conducted him to the bank of the river Ganges.

The Nāga kings reborn in the Ganges thought to themselves, “Men render honor to the Tathāgata; shall we not do the same?” [443] Accordingly they created boats of gold and silver and precious stones, caused couches to be prepared of gold and silver and precious stones, caused the surface of the river to be covered with lotus flowers of the five colors, and then requested the Teacher to enter their respective boats, saying to him, “Reverend Sir, be favorable to us likewise.” Thereupon deities one and all, beginning with the deities of earth and extending to the deities of the highest Brahmā-world, said to themselves, “Both men and Nāgas are rendering honor to the Tathāgata; shall we not do the same?” Accordingly deities one and all did honor to him.

Thereupon Nāgas raised parasol after parasol, each a league in height, and below them other Nāgas did the same. Likewise deities of earth dwelling in trees and jungles and mountains, and deities dwelling in the sky; from the World of the Nāgas to the World of Brahmā, the deities contained within the circle of the Cakkavāla one and all raised parasol after parasol. Between the parasols were flags, and between the flags were banners, and at intervals were

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

their faith in the Buddha, kings rendered smooth the surface of the earth and sprinkled sand, and spread flowers of various kinds knee-deep; through the supernatural power of the Nāgas the surface of the Ganges was covered with lotuses of the five kinds; as far as the highest heaven parasol after parasol was raised aloft; the whole round world was, as it were, uninterrupted decoration and holiday."

The Teacher drew near and asked them, "Monks, what is it that you are discussing now as you sit here together?" When they told him, he said, "Monks, it is not true that honors and offerings have accrued to me through my supernatural power as Buddha, or through the supernatural power of Nāgas and deities and Brahmā; on the contrary it is through the supernatural power of a slight offering I made in a previous state of existence that these honors and offerings have accrued to me." Thereupon the monks asked him what he meant; and in response to their request to make the matter plain, he related the following

1 a. Story of the Past: The Brahman Saṁkha

Once upon a time, long, long ago, there dwelt at Takkaṣilā a Brahman named Saṁkha, and he had a son named Susīma, a youth about sixteen years of age. One day Susīma went to his father and said to him, "My dear father, I wish to go to Benāres and rehearse the Sacred Word." His father said to him, "Very well, my dear son; such and such a Brahman is a friend of mine; [446] go and study under him." "Very well," replied the son, accepting the suggestion. In due course he reached Benāres, approached that Brāhman, and told him that his father had sent him to him.

The Brahman, learning that the youth was the son of his friend, accepted him as a pupil, and so soon as the weariness of the journey had worn off, on an auspicious day, began to make him repeat the Sacred Word to him. Now the youth learned a great deal in a short time and retained in his memory without loss everything he had learned, even as lion-oil placed in a golden vessel is retained without loss. The result was that in no long time he learned from the lips of his teacher all there was to be learned. He repeated the Sacred Word accurately and understood the beginning and middle of the teaching he had received, but not the end.

So he approached his teacher and said to him, "I understand only the beginning and middle of this teaching, but not the end." His teacher replied, "My dear pupil, I also do not understand the end." Then the youth asked his teacher, "But, teacher, who does know the end?" His teacher replied, "My dear pupil, here in Isipatana reside sages who may know; approach them and ask them."

So the youth approached the Private Buddhas and asked them, "Is it true that you know the end of this teaching?" "Yes, we know." "Well then, teach it to me." "We will not teach it to anyone who is not a monk; if you need to know the end, become a monk." [447] "Very well," replied the youth, consenting, and forthwith retired from the world and became a monk of their order. "Just learn this," said they to the youth; "thus the lower garment is to be put on and thus the upper garment is to be put on." Thus did they teach him the minor duties.

Remaining there as their pupil and learning all they had to teach him, because he possessed the requisite faculties, he attained in but a short time the enlightenment of a Private Buddha. His fame spread throughout the city of Benāres even as the full moon in the sky, and he received the richest gain and the highest renown. Because the works he wrought were conducive to but a short term of life, he passed into Nibbāna in but a short time. The Private Buddhas and the populace performed the funeral rites over his body, and having so done, gathered up the relics and erected a shrine over them at the gate of the city.

Samkha the Brahman thought to himself, "My son has been gone a long time; I will find out what has become of him." So, desiring to see his son once more, he departed from Takkasilā and in due course arrived at Benāres. Seeing a great concourse of people, he thought to himself, "Doubtless some one in this throng will know what has become of my son."

Accordingly he approached the crowd and asked, "A youth named Susīma came here some time ago; is it possible that you know what has become of him?" "Yes, Brahman, we know. He studied the Three Vedas under such and such a Brahman, retired from the world and became a monk, attained the Enlightenment of a Private Buddha, and passed into Nibbāna; this shrine which has been erected here is his shrine." Thereupon the Brahman smote the earth with his hand, and weeping [448] and lamenting, went to the inclosure about the shrine. He tore up the grass, brought sand in his outer garment and spread it over the inclosure about the shrine, sprinkled the ground with water from his water-pot, scattered wild flowers as a mark of respect, spread aloft his robe as a banner, planted his own parasol over the mound, and having so done, departed. Story of the Past concluded.

When the Teacher had related this Story of the Past, he said, “At that time, monks, I was the Brahman Saṁkha, and it was I who uprooted the grass which grew in the inclosure about the shrine of the Private Buddha Susīma. As the fruit of this act of mine, these princes cleared a path eight leagues long of stumps of trees and brambles and made it smooth and even. It was I who spread sand there; and as the fruit of this act of mine, these princes spread sand over a path eight leagues long. It was I who scattered wild flowers there as a mark of respect; and as the fruit of this act of mine, various kinds of flowers were scattered over a path eight leagues long, and the water of the Ganges was covered for a distance of a league with lotuses of the five kinds. It was I who sprinkled the ground with water from my water-pot; and as the fruit of this act of mine, there was a shower of rain in Vesāli. It was I who raised a banner aloft and planted a parasol; and as the fruit of this act of mine, the whole circle of the Cakkavāla as far as the highest heaven, was gay with one mass of flags and banners and with parasol after parasol. Monks, these offerings and honors did not accrue to me through my supernatural power as Buddha, nor yet through the supernatural power of Nāgas and deities and Brahmā; on the contrary it was through the supernatural power of a slight offering I made in a previous state of existence.” So saying, he expounded the Law by pronouncing the following Stanza, [449]

290. If by renouncing some trifling pleasure one can obtain pleasure abounding,
A wise man should consider pleasure abounding and renounce the trifling pleasure.

XXI. 2. “NOT HATRED FOR HATRED”¹

Whoever by causing suffering to others. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain woman who ate the eggs of a hen.

The story goes that in a certain village named Paṇḍupura, not far from the city of Sāvattī, there dwelt a certain fisherman. One day as he was on his way to Sāvattī, he saw some tortoise’s eggs lying on the bank of the river Aciravatī. Taking these with him, he went to ¹ Cf. Story i. 4, and Rogers, Buddhaghosha’s Parables, xi: 103–104. Text: N iii. 449–451.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXI. 3. THE MONKS WHO WERE GIVEN TO VANITIES¹

For that which should be done. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jātiyā Grove near Bhaddiya with reference to the monks of Bhaddiya.

It seems that these monks were in the habit of ornamenting their shoes, even as says the Sacred Word: “Now at that time the monks of Bhaddiya were in the habit of wearing ornamental shoes of various kinds. They made or caused to be made shoes of tīṇa-grass; they made or caused to be made shoes of muñja-grass; they made or caused to be made shoes of babbaja-grass, of the leaves of the date-palm, of kamala-grass; they made or caused to be made woolen shoes. They neglected instruction, questioning, higher morality, higher meditation, higher wisdom.” [452]

When the monks learned that these monks were given to this mode of conduct, they were offended and informed the Teacher. Thereupon the Teacher rebuked those monks, saying to them, “Monks, you came here for one purpose, but have devoted yourselves to another.” So saying, he preached the Law to them by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

292. For that which should be done is left undone;
And that is done which should be left undone;
The Impurities of the arrogant and heedless ever increase.

293. But they that ever devote themselves to Meditation on the Body,
They follow not after that which should be left undone,
But persevere in that which should be done;
The Impurities of the thoughtful and intelligent come to an end. [453]

At the conclusion of the lesson, those monks were established in Arahatsip; the assembled company also profited by the lesson.

XXI. 4. THE MONK WHO HAD KILLED HIS MOTHER AND FATHER²

After killing a mother. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Lakunṭaka Bhaddiya.

¹ Derived from the Vinaya, Mahā Vagga, v. 8. 1: i. 190¹⁻⁶. Text: N iii. 451–453.

² Text: N iii. 453–455.

For once upon a day several visiting monks drew near to the Teacher as he sat in his day-quarters, saluted him, and sat down respectfully on one side. At that moment Elder Lakunṭaka Bhaddiya passed by not far from the Exalted One. The Teacher, knowing the disposition of mind of those monks, looked at the Elder and said to the monks, "Look, monks! There is a monk who has killed mother and father and free from pain he goes!" "What is this the Teacher says?" exclaimed those monks, looking each other in the face, while doubt sprang up within them. And they said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, what say you?" Then the Teacher preached the Law to them by pronouncing the following Stanza,

294. After killing a mother and a father, and two kings of the Warrior caste,
After destroying a kingdom with its inhabitants, scatheless goes the Brahman. [454]

At the conclusion of the lesson those monks were established in Arahatship.

(The story relating to the second stanza is like the preceding. At that time also the Teacher spoke with reference to Elder Lakunṭaka. Preaching the Law to those monks, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza:)

295. After killing a mother and a father, two Brahman kings,
And an eminent man besides, scatheless goes the Brahman.

XXI. 5. THE YOUTH AND THE DEMONS ¹

Well awake. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to the son of a wood-carter. [455]

There lived at Rājagaha two youths who spent most of their time playing ball. One of them was the son of a true believer, the other the son of a heretic. The son of the true believer used to practice Meditation on the Buddha as he threw the ball, and would say as he threw the ball, "Praise be to the Buddha!" The other youth used to proclaim the merits of the heretics and would say as he threw the ball, "Praise be to the Arahats!" Of the two youths, the son of the true believer invariably won, while the other youth invariably lost. The son of the heretic observed the actions of his rival, [456] and said to himself, "This youth practices such and such a form of meditation and says such and such words as he throws the ball, and by so doing invariably gets the best of me; I also will do likewise." Accordingly he began to familiarize himself with Meditation on the Buddha.

¹ Text: N iii. 455-460.

Now one day his father yoked his cart and set out to procure firewood, taking his son with him. After filling his cart with firewood in the forest, he set out to return. On his way back he stopped outside of the city near a burning-ground in a pleasant place where there was water, unyoked his oxen, and dealt out the food. In the evening his oxen followed a herd of cattle into the city. The cart-driver started after his oxen, entered the city, found his oxen while it was still evening, and taking them with him, set out to depart from the city. But he could not find the gate; indeed, before he reached the gate, it had been closed. When it was night-time, his son lay down under the cart all by himself and fell asleep.

Now Rājagaha was ordinarily haunted by many evil spirits, and it was near a burning-ground that the youth lay down to sleep. As he lay there, two evil spirits caught sight of him. One of them preyed upon the burning-ground and was a holder of false views, while the other was an orthodox believer. Said the holder of false views to the orthodox believer, "This man is our prey; let us eat him." The orthodox believer replied, "Enough! get rid of that idea!" But in spite of the efforts of the orthodox believer to prevent him, the holder of false views disregarded his words, and taking hold of the youth by the feet, tried to drag him away. [457]

At that instant, as the result of the youth's thorough familiarity with the practice of Meditation upon the Buddha, the youth exclaimed, "Praise be to the Buddha!" Thereupon the evil spirit, terrified with great fear, stepped back. Said the orthodox believer, "We have done what we ought not to have done; we shall pay the penalty for this." So saying, the orthodox believer stood guard over the youth, while the holder of false views entered the city, filled the king's dish with food, and brought it back with him. Then both of the evil spirits ministered to the youth as would a mother and a father, assisting him to rise and giving him food to eat. Finally, through their supernatural power as demons, they cut letters on the king's dish, telling what they had done, saying to themselves, "Let the king see these letters, but no one else." And placing the dish in the wood-cart, they stood guard over the cart all night long and then went their way.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXI. 6. THE VAJJIAN PRINCE WHO BECAME A MONK ¹

Fraught with hardship is the life of a monk. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Mahāvana near Vesāli with reference to a certain Vajjian prince who became a monk. [460] The story concerning him is as follows:

A certain Vajjian prince who had become a monk took up his residence at Vesāli in a certain forest-grove. It so happened that at that time there was a festival in progress at Vesāli which lasted through the night. When this monk heard the noise and tumult of the beating of drums and the playing of musical instruments at Vesāli, he wept and lamented, and uttered on that occasion the following Stanza,

Alone we reside in the forest, like a log thrown away in the wood.
On such a night as this, who is worse off than we?

It appears that this monk had formerly been a prince in the kingdom of the Vajjians, and that when his turn came to rule, he renounced his kingdom and became a monk. [461] On the night of full moon of the month Kattika, the entire city of Vesāli was decked with flags and banners, making it coterminous with the realms of the Four Great Kings, and the festival began. As the festival continued through the night, he listened to the noise of the beating of drums and the striking of other musical instruments and the sound of the playing of lutes. When the seven thousand and seven hundred and seven princes of Vesāli, and a like number of young princes and commanders-in-chief, all dressed and adorned in festive array, entered the street for the purpose of taking part in the festivities, he himself walked through his great cloister sixty cubits long, beheld the moon poised in mid-heaven, stopped near the seat at the end of the cloister and surveyed his own person, for lack of festive garments and adornments resembling a log of wood thrown away in the forest. And then and there he thought to himself, "Is there any one worse off than we?"

Under ordinary circumstances he possessed the merits and virtues of a forest-dweller, but on this occasion was oppressed with discontent, and therefore spoke thus. Thereupon the forest-spirit who inhabited that forest-grove formed the resolution, "I will stir up this monk," and uttered in reply the following Stanza,

¹ This story is derived from Samyutta, ix. 9: i. 201-202, and is in turn the source of Thera-Gāthā Commentary, lxii. Text: N iii. 460-463.

Alone you reside in the forest, like a log thrown away in the wood.
Many envy you, even as denizens of Hell envy him that goes to Heaven.

The discontented monk heard this Stanza, and on the following day approached the Teacher, saluted him, and sat down respectfully on one side. Aware of what had happened, [462] and desiring to make plain the hardships of the household life, the Teacher summed up the Five Kinds of Suffering in the following Stanza,

302. Fraught with hardship is the life of a monk, and hard to enjoy.
Fraught with hardship is life in the world. Houses are painful to live in.
Painful is it to dwell together with unequals. Suffering follows wayfarers in the round of existences.
Therefore one should not be such a wayfarer; one should not let suffering follow him.

XXI. 7. CITTA THE FAITHFUL LAYMAN ¹

If a man be faithful. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the householder Citta. [464]

This story has been related in detail in the Bāla Vagga in the Commentary on the Stanza beginning, "The fool will seek for false reputation." The Stanza likewise occurs there. For it is there said:

"Now, Reverend Sir, was it solely because he came to visit you, that he received all this honor? Or would he also have received it had he gone elsewhere?" "Ānanda, he would have received it just the same, no matter whether he had come to visit me or had gone elsewhere. For this disciple is faithful and believing and virtuous. Such a disciple as this may go to what place he will, and there, no matter where it may be, will receive gain and honor." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

303. If a man be faithful, endued with virtue, possessed of fame and wealth,
He may go to what place he will, and there, wherever it may be, he is honored.

¹ Cf. Story v. 14. Text: N iii. 463-465.

XXI. 8. CULLĀ SUBHADDĀ THE VIRTUOUS¹

From afar shine the good. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Cullā Subhaddā, daughter of Anāthapiṇḍika. [465]

The story goes that from the time Anāthapiṇḍika was a mere boy, he had as his most intimate friend a treasurer's son named Ugga, who lived in the city of Ugga. They acquired the arts in the house of the same teacher, and while there studying together, made the following agreement, "When we grow up and get married and sons and daughters are born to us, in case one of us chooses the daughter of the other to be the wife of his son, the other shall give him his daughter." When the two youths reached manhood, they assumed the post of treasurer, each in his own city.

Now on a certain occasion Treasurer Ugga set out for Sāvatti with five hundred carts on a trading expedition. Thereupon Anāthapiṇḍika addressed his daughter Cullā Subhaddā, enjoining upon her the following command, "Dear daughter, your father Treasurer Ugga has come to visit us; it rests upon you to do for him everything that etiquette requires." "Very well," replied Cullā Subhaddā, promising to obey her father's command. So from the day of Ugga's arrival Cullā Subhaddā with her own hand prepared for him sauces and curries and other things to eat, and procured garlands and perfumes and ointments and other things for his comfort. [466] When it was meal-time, she had water prepared for his bath and after the bath performed for him faithfully all of the various duties.

When Treasurer Ugga observed how excellent was her conduct, his heart was filled with joy. One day as he sat chatting pleasantly with Anāthapiṇḍika, he reminded the latter of the agreement which the two had made when they were youths and then and there chose Cullā Subhaddā to be the wife of his son. Now Ugga, as the result of his bringing up, was a holder of false views, and therefore Anāthapiṇḍika told the Possessor of the Ten Forces about the matter. The Teacher, seeing that Treasurer Ugga possessed the faculties requisite for Conversion, gave his consent. So Treasurer Anāthapiṇḍika, after talking the matter over with his wife, accepted the offer of Treasurer Ugga and set the day for the marriage of his daughter.

¹ Cf. Story iv. 8. This story is referred to at Milindapañha, 350¹⁴. Text: N iii. 465—471.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

In reply to the question of her mother-in-law, Subhaddā proclaimed the merits and virtues of the Buddha and of the disciples of the Buddha, as follows,

Tranquil are their senses, tranquil are their minds, tranquil they walk, tranquil they stand.

Their eyes are cast down; but little do they say. Such are my monks.

Their deeds are pure, their words are pure,
Their thoughts are pure. Such are my monks. [468]

Spotless are they like shell-pearls, pure within and without,
Full of good qualities. Such are my monks.

The world is elated by gain and depressed by loss;
But they are indifferent both to gain and to loss. Such are my monks.

The world is elated by fame and depressed by lack of fame;
But they are indifferent both to fame and to lack of fame. Such are my monks.

The world is elated by praise and depressed by blame;
But they assume the same attitude both to praise and to blame. Such are my monks.

The world is elated by pleasure and depressed by suffering;
But they are unmoved both in pleasure and in suffering. Such are my monks.

With these words and much else to the same effect, did Subhaddā satisfy her mother-in-law. Thereupon her mother-in-law asked her, “Would it be possible to let us also see your monks?” “That would be entirely possible,” replied Subhaddā. “Well then,” replied her mother-in-law, “arrange matters so that we may see them.” “Very well,” said Subhaddā. Thereupon Subhaddā prepared rich offerings for the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, took her stand on the topmost floor of the palace, faced in the direction of Jetavana, did reverence with the Five Rests, called to mind the merits of the Buddha, honored the Buddha with scents and perfumes and flowers and incense, and threw into the air eight handfuls of jasmine-flowers, saying as she did so, “Reverend Sir, I invite the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha for to-morrow; let the Teacher understand by this token that he has been invited.” [469] The flowers proceeded through the air of their own accord, and forming a flower-canopy, stood over the Teacher as he preached the Law in the midst of the Fourfold Congregation.

At that moment Anāthapiṇḍika, who had been listening to the Teacher’s sermon, invited the Teacher to be his guest on the morrow. The Teacher replied, “Householder, I have accepted an invitation for the morrow.” “But, Reverend Sir,” replied Anāthapiṇḍika, “no one came here before me; whose invitation did you accept?" Said the Teacher, "Cullā Subhaddā invited me, householder." "But, Reverend Sir, does not Cullā Subhaddā live a long way off, a matter of a hundred and twenty leagues from here?" "Yes," said he; "but the good, even though they dwell afar off, manifest themselves as if they stood face to face." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, 304. From afar are manifest the good, like the Himālaya mountains;

They that lack goodness are not seen here, like arrows shot in darkness. [470]

Sakka king of the gods, aware that the Teacher had accepted Cullā Subhaddā's invitation, gave the following order to the god Vissakamma, "Create five hundred pagodas, and on the morrow conduct the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha to the city of Ugga." So on the following day the god Vissakamma created five hundred pagodas and took his stand at the gate of Jetavana. The Teacher selected five hundred Holy Arahats, and together with his retinue seated in pagodas, proceeded through the air to the city of Ugga. Treasurer Ugga too, with his retinue, as Subhaddā directed, stood looking down the road by which the Tathāgata was to come. When he saw the Teacher approach in all his splendor and majesty, [471] his heart was filled with joy. He rendered him high honor with garlands and other offerings, welcomed him to his house, saluted him, gave him abundant gifts, invited him again and again to be his guest, and for seven days gave him rich offerings. And the Teacher, minded to do him good, preached the Law to him. Beginning with Treasurer Ugga, eighty-four thousand living beings obtained Comprehension of the Law. By way of showing favor to Subhaddā, the Teacher directed Elder Anuruddha to remain behind, saying to him, "You remain right here." So saying, he returned to Sāvatti. From that time on, the city of Ugga was a faithful, believing city.

XXI. 9. THE SOLITARY MONK ¹

He that sits alone. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a monk named Elder Solitary.

It appears that this Elder was known to the fourfold community as one who sat alone and walked alone and stood alone. Now the monks told the Tathāgata about him, saying, “Reverend Sir, such and such is the practice of this Elder. “Well done! well done!” exclaimed the Teacher, [472] applauding him. “He that is a monk ought to live as a solitary.” And praising the life of solitude, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 471-473.

305. He who sits alone, lodges alone, and walks alone, unwearied,
He who, alone, subdues himself, such a man will delight in the outskirts of the forest.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

repeat your gossip, and so deprive him of the gain and honor that are his." "Very well," replied Sundarī, promising to do so.

Every evening after that, at the time when the people were entering the city after listening to the Teacher's sermon, she would walk in the direction of Jetavana with garlands, perfumes, ointments, camphor, bitter fruits, and so forth. When they asked her, "Where are you going?" she would reply, "To the monk Gotama's, for it is my habit to spend the night alone with him in the Perfumed Chamber." After spending the night in a certain monastery belonging to the heretics, she would start back early in the morning along the Jetavana road and walk in the direction of the city. When they asked her, "Where are you going, Sundarī?" she would reply, "I have spent the night alone with the monk Gotama in the Perfumed Chamber, and having permitted him to take his fill of pleasure, am now on my way back."

After a few days had passed, the heretics [476] gave money to some villains and said to them, "Go kill Sundarī and throw her body on the pile of withered garlands and rubbish near the Perfumed Chamber of the monk Gotama." The villains did as they were commanded. Thereupon the heretics raised a hue and cry, saying, "We cannot find Sundarī," and reported the matter to the king. "Whom do you suspect?" asked the king. The heretics replied, "For the last few days she has spent her nights at the Jetavana; but as for what happened to her there, that we know not." "Well then," said the king, "go and search for her." Having thus secured the permission of the king, they gathered together their own supporters, went to the Jetavana, made a search, and found the body of Sundarī lying among the withered garlands and rubbish. Placing her body on a litter, they carried it into the city and then went and made the following report to the king, "The disciples of the monk Gotama thought to themselves, 'We will cover up the evil deed committed by the Teacher.' Therefore they caused Sundarī to be killed and threw her body among the withered garlands and rubbish." Said the king, "Very well, go through the streets of the city."

Thereupon the heretics went through the streets of the city crying out, "Behold the deed of the monks who are the disciples of the Sakyan prince!" This and much else to the same effect did the heretics proclaim throughout the city, and having so done, returned to the gate of the royal palace. The king caused the body of Sundarī to be placed on a platform in the burning-ground, and set a guard over it.

Most of the people of Sāvatti, except the Noble Disciples, took up the cry, "Behold the deed of the monks who are the disciples of the Sakyan prince!" And within the city and without the city, in the parks and in the woods, [477] they went about reviling the monks. The monks reported the matter to the Tathāgata. Said the Teacher, "Well then, do you thus reprove these men." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

306. He who declares that to have happened which happened not, goes to hell, and also he who having done a thing, says, "I did it not;"

Both these men are the same after death; they are men of evil deeds in the next world. [478]

The king sent out his men, saying to them, "Find out whether others did not kill Sundarī." Now those villains spent their money on strong drink, and while they were drinking, fell to quarreling with each other. Said one to another, "You killed Sundarī with one blow, and having killed her, threw her body on the pile of withered garlands and rubbish. And with the money you got for it you are drinking strong drink! Very well! very well!" The king's men seized those villains and brought them before the king. The king asked them, "Did you kill Sundarī?" "Yes, your majesty." "Who hired you to kill her?" "The heretics, your majesty." Thereupon the king caused the heretics to be summoned before him and said to them, "Go through the city and proclaim as follows, 'We caused this woman Sundarī to be killed because of desire to cast reproach upon the monk Gotama; there is no fault in the monk Gotama, or in the disciples of Gotama.'" The heretics did as they were commanded, and then the foolish multitude believed. The heretics received the punishment for murder, and from that time on, the honor rendered to the Buddhas increased the more.

XXII. 2. THE SKELETON-GHOST ¹

Many who wear the yellow robe. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to persons oppressed by the power of the fruit of the evil deeds committed by them. [479]

For as Venerable Moggallāna the Great was descending Mount Vulture Peak with Elder Lakkhaṇa, he saw, among others, forms of ghosts consisting of skeletons, and smiled at the sight of them. When Elder Lakkhaṇa asked him why he smiled, he said, “Brother, this is not the proper time for you to ask me such a question. Wait until we are in the presence of the Tathāgata and then ask me. So when they were in the presence of the Tathāgata, Elder Lakkhaṇa repeated his question. In reply, Elder Moggallāna the Great told him that he had seen ghosts consisting of skeletons.

¹ This story is a brief outline of Samyutta, xix: ii. 254-256. Text: N iii. 479-480.

“Brother,” said he, “just now, as I was descending Mount Vulture Peak, I saw a monk soaring through the air, and his body was all aflame.” Continuing in the same strain, he mentioned five of their associates whom he had seen on fire, bowls, robes, girdles, and all. Thereupon the Teacher told the monks of the wickedness of certain monks who retired from the world in the dispensation of the Buddha Kassapa and failed to act according to their profession. And pointing out the fruit of evil deeds to the monks who at that moment sat there before him, he pronounced the following Stanza,

307. Many about whose neck hangs the yellow robe, are evildoers and uncontrolled;
Evildoers by reason of their evil deeds, they are reborn in Hell.

XXII. 3. MAGIC FOR MEAT¹

Better were it to swallow an iron ball. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Mahāvana near Vesāli with reference to the Vaggumudātīriya monks. [480]

This story occurs in the Pārājika in the section entitled “On laying claim to supernatural gifts.” At that time the Teacher said to those monks, “But, monks, is it true that for the sake of the belly you have before laymen praised each other as possessors of supernatural gifts?” “Yes, Reverend Sir,” they replied. Thereupon the Teacher reproved those monks in varied terms, and having so done, pronounced the following Stanza, [481]

308. Better were it to swallow an iron ball, red-hot, like a flame of fire,
Than that one who is corrupt and lacks self-control should live on the charity of the land.

¹ Cf. Vinaya, Pārājika, iv. 1: iii. 87–91. Text: N iii. 480–481.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXII. 5. THE PRESUMPTUOUS MONK ¹

Even as a blade of grass. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain insolent monk.

The story goes that a certain monk thoughtlessly broke off a single blade of grass. His conscience troubled him about it, and so he went to a certain other monk, told him what he had done, and asked him the following question, “Brother, what happens to a monk who breaks off a blade of grass?” The other monk replied, “Evidently you think something happens to a man who breaks off a blade of grass, but such is not the case. One has but to confess what he has done and he is free.” So saying, [484] he himself seized a clump of grass with both his hands and pulled it up. The monks reported the incident to the Teacher. The Teacher rebuked that monk soundly, and preaching the Law, pronounced the following Stanzas,

311. Even as a blade of grass awkwardly grasped cuts the hand,
So the work of a monk, badly handled, drags down to Hell.

312. A loose deed or a corrupt course
Or dubious chastity, brings no great fruit.

313. If there is aught to be done, one should do it, one should do it with all his might,
For a lax wandering-ascetic but scatters dust the more.

XXII. 6. THE JEALOUS WOMAN ²

It were better that an evil deed were left undone. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain jealous woman. [486]

The story goes that the husband of this woman committed fornication with a certain female servant who lived in the house. Thereupon this jealous woman bound the servant hand and foot, cut off her nose and ears, threw her into a secret chamber, and closed the door. Then, in order that she might hide the evil deed which she had herself committed, she said to her husband, “Come, good husband, let us go to the monastery and listen to the Law.” And taking her husband with her, she went to the monastery, and sat down and listened to the Law.

¹ Text: N iii. 483–485.

² Text: N iii. 486–487.

It happened that some relatives of hers came to her house to pay her a visit. As soon as they opened the door and saw the outrage that had been committed, they released the female servant. Thereupon she went to the monastery, and standing in the midst of the fourfold company, informed the Possessor of the Ten Forces what had happened. The Teacher listened to what she had to say and then replied, "One ought never to do even a slight wrong, thinking, 'Others know nothing about this evil deed which I have committed.' Even though no one else knows about it, one should do only that which is good. For an evil deed, even though one hide it, brings remorse afterwards, but a good deed produces naught but happiness." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

314. It were better that an evil deed were left undone, for an evil deed causes suffering afterwards;

It were better to do a good deed, for after doing a good deed, one does not suffer. [487]

At the conclusion of the lesson the layman and his wife were established in the Fruit of Conversion. And then and there they freed the female slave and made her a follower of the Law.

XXII. 7. FORTIFY YOURSELF LIKE A CITY ¹

Even as a frontier city. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a company of visiting monks.

The story goes that these monks went to a certain frontier country, entered upon residence, and passed the first month pleasantly. In the second month, however, a band of thieves came and attacked the village to which they were accustomed to resort for alms, and carried away some of the inhabitants as prisoners. From that time on, the men were so busy fortifying that frontier city against thieves that they found no opportunity to minister properly to the needs of those monks. The result was that the monks spent their residence in great discomfort.

When they had completed residence, they returned to Sāvatti to see the Teacher, [488] saluted the Teacher, and sat down respectfully on one side. The Teacher, after exchanging the usual friendly greetings with them, asked them, “Monks, did you pass the time pleasantly?” “Reverend Sir,” replied the monks, “the first month we spent there was a very pleasant one. But in the second month a band of thieves attacked the village, and from that time on, the inhabitants were so busily engaged in fortifying the city that they found no opportunity to minister properly to our needs. The result was that we had a very uncomfortable time.” Said the Teacher, “Never mind, monks; be not disturbed. It is a difficult matter to obtain a pleasant dwelling at all times. But just as those men guarded their city, so ought a monk to guard himself.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iii. 487-489.

315. Even as a frontier city is well guarded both within and without,
Even so one should guard himself; let not a moment slip.
For they that let the moments slip, mourn, delivered over to Hell.

XXII. 8. DEGREES OF NAKEDNESS ¹

They that feel shame when they ought not to feel shame. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Naked Ascetics of the Jain Order, Niganṭhas. [489]

For one day the monks, seeing Naked Ascetics of the Jain Order, began the following discussion: “Brethren, these Niganṭhas are to be preferred to the Acelakas, who go entirely naked, for these ascetics at least wear a covering in front. These ascetics evidently possess some sense of modesty.” Overhearing the discussion, the Niganṭhas said, “It is not for this reason at all that we wear a covering. [490] On the contrary, even dust and dirt are actual individuals, endowed with the principle of life; and so, — for fear they may fall into our alms-dishes, — for this reason we wear a covering.” Arguments and counter-arguments followed between both parties of monks, and there was a long discussion. Afterwards the monks approached the Teacher, and having sat down, told him of the incident. Said the Teacher, “Monks, they that feel shame when they ought not to feel shame, and they that do not feel shame when they ought to feel shame, go to an evil future state.” So saying, he preached the Law by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

¹ Text: N iii. 489–491.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

The Teacher, surveying the disposition of their minds, preached the Law to them by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

- 318. They that see sin where no sin is, and they that see no sin where sin exists, Such men, since they have embraced false views, go to an evil future state.
- 319. They who know sin in its sinfulness, and that which is harmless in its harmlessness.
Such men, since they have embraced correct views, go to a happy future state.

BOOK XXIII. THE ELEPHANT, NĀGA VAGGA

XXIII. 1. THE SECTARIES INSULT THE BUDDHA ¹

Even as an elephant. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to himself. [1] The story is related in detail in the Commentary on the first Stanzas of the Appaināda Vagga. For it is there said:

Unable to injure the women, Māgandiyā thought to herself, “I will do to the monk Gotama what ought to be done.” So she bribed the citizens and said to them, “When the monk Gotama comes into town and walks about, do you join with slaves in reviling and abusing him, and drive him out.” So heretics who had no faith in the Three Jewels followed the Teacher about when he entered the city and shouted at him, “You are a robber, you are a simpleton, you are a fool, you are a camel, you are an ox, you are an ass, you are a denizen of hell, you are a brute beast, [2] you have no hope of salvation, a state of punishment is all that you can look forward to.” Thus they reviled and abused the Teacher with the Ten Terms of Abuse.

Hearing their words of abuse, Venerable Ānanda said this to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, these citizens are reviling and abusing us; let us go elsewhere.” “Where shall we go, Ānanda?” “Let us go to some other city, Reverend Sir.” “But suppose men revile and abuse us there, where then shall we go, Ānanda?” “Then we shall go to some other city, Reverend Sir.” “But suppose men revile and abuse us there, where then shall we go, Ānanda?” “Then we shall go to some other city, Reverend Sir.” “Ānanda, we should do no such thing. Wherever a tumult arises, even there should we remain until that tumult dies away, and only under those circumstances should we go elsewhere. But who are reviling and abusing you, Ānanda?” “Reverend Sir, beginning with the slaves and servants, all are reviling us.” “Ānanda, I am like an elephant that has entered the fray. And even as it is incumbent upon an elephant that has entered the fray that he should withstand the arrows which come from the four quarters, precisely so it is my duty to endure with patience the words spoken by many wicked men.” [3] So saying, he preached the Law with reference to himself by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

¹ Cf. Story ii. 1. 6 (text: i. 211^u–213^v), HOS. 28. 283. Text: N iv. 1–5.

320. Even as an elephant engaged in the fray withstands arrows shot from the bow,
So also must I bear abuse, for the multitude is wicked.
321. It is a tamed elephant they lead to battle; it is a tamed elephant the king mounts;
It is the tamed that is best among men, he that endures abuse patiently.
322. Of surpassing excellence are mules which are tamed, and well-bred Sindh horses,
And great elephants of the jungle; but better yet is the man who has tamed himself. [5]

At the conclusion of the lesson all of that great multitude which had stood in the streets and at the cross-roads, and for a bribe reviled the Teacher, obtained the Fruit of Conversion and the Fruits of the Second and Third Paths.

XXIII. 2. THE MONK WHO HAD BEEN AN ELEPHANT-TRAINER ¹

For it is not on riding-animals such as these. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain monk who had once been an elephant-trainer.

The story goes that once upon a day this monk stood by the bank of the river Aciravati watching an elephant-tamer try to break in an elephant. Observing that the elephant-tamer was not succeeding very well in teaching his elephant the tricks he wished to teach him, the monk said to some other monks who stood near, “Brethren, if this elephant-trainer were to prick this elephant in such and such a place, he would very quickly teach him the trick he wishes to teach him.” The elephant-trainer heard what he said, followed his suggestion, and soon compelled the elephant to submit to his will.

The monks reported the matter to the Teacher. The Teacher caused that monk to be summoned before him and asked him, “Is it true that you said this?” “Yes, Reverend Sir, it is true.” Thereupon the Teacher rebuked him and said, “Vain man, what have you to do either with a riding-elephant or with any other tamed animal? For it is not on such riding-animals as these that a man can go to that

¹ Text: N iv. 5-6.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

however, as he was returning to the house of his oldest son after his bath, [8] his daughter-in-law, who stood at the gate, saw him and said to him, "Did you give your oldest son a hundred or a thousand pieces of money more than you gave your other sons? You certainly gave each of your sons two hundred thousand pieces of money. Do you not know the way to the house of any of your other sons?" The Brahman answered angrily, "Perish, vile woman!" and went to the house of his second son. But in a few days he was driven from the house of his second son as he had been from the house of the first, and in like manner from the houses of his two youngest sons. Finally he found himself without a single house he could enter.

Thereupon he retired from the world and became a monk of the Paṇḍaraṅga Order, begging his food from door to door. In the course of time he became worn out by old age, and his body withered away as the result of the poor food he ate and the wretched quarters in which he was obliged to sleep. One day, after he had returned from his begging rounds, he lay down on his back and fell asleep. When he awoke from sleep and sat up and surveyed himself and reflected that there was no one of his sons to whom he might go for refuge, he thought to himself, "They say that the monk Gotama has a countenance that does not frown, a face that is frank and open, that his manner of conversing is pleasant, and that he greets strangers in a kind and friendly way. Possibly if I go to the monk Gotama, I shall receive a friendly greeting." So adjusting his under and upper garments, taking his alms-bowl, and grasping his staff, he went to the Exalted One, even as it is said:

Now a certain Brahman, a man who had formerly possessed wealth and social position, rough, clad in rough garments, drew near to where the Exalted One was, and having drawn near, sat down respectfully on one side. And as he sat respectfully on one side, the Exalted One greeted him in a pleasant manner and said this to him, "How comes it, [9] Brahman, that you are rough and clad in rough garments?" "Sir Gotama, I have four sons living in the world, but instigated by their wives, they have driven me out of their houses." "Well then, Brahman, learn these Stanzas thoroughly, and when the people are gathered together in the hall and your sons are gathered together with them, recite them before the assembled company:

They at whose birth I rejoiced, whose birth I desired,
Even they, instigated by their wives, keep me away as a dog would a hog.
Wicked and worthless, they say to me, "Dear father! dear father!"

Ogres in the form of sons, they forsake me in my old age.

When a horse is grown old and useless, he is deprived of food;

So likewise a father of simpletons, as a monk, begs his food from door to door.

Better the staff for me than disobedient sons;

The staff keeps off the savage bull and likewise the savage dog.

In darkness he was before; in the deep the shallow prospers;

By the power of the staff he recovers his footing when he stumbles. [10]

The Brahman, taught by the Teacher, learned these Stanzas by heart. On the day appointed for the Brahmans to assemble, the sons of the Brahman pushed their way into the hall, dressed in their costliest garments, adorned with all their jewels, and sat down on a costly seat in the midst of the Brahmans. Thereupon the Brahman said to himself, "Now is my opportunity." So he entered the hall, made his way into the midst of the assemblage, lifted up his hand, and said, "I desire to recite certain Stanzas to you; pray listen to me." "Recite them, Brahman; we are listening." So the Brahman stood there and recited the Stanzas which he had learned from the Teacher.

Now at that time this was the law of mankind: If any devour the substance of mother and father, and support not mother and father, he shall be put to death. Therefore the sons of that Brahman fell at their father's feet and begged him to spare their lives, saying, "Dear father, spare our lives!" Out of the softness of a father's heart the Brahman said, "Sirs, do not kill my sons; they will support me." The men said to his sons, "Sirs, if from this day you do not take proper care of your father, we will kill you." The sons, thoroughly frightened, seated their father in a chair, raised the chair with their own hands, [11] and carried their father home. They anointed the body of their father with oil, flying this way and that in their haste, bathed him, employing perfumes and aromatic powders, and having so done, summoned their wives and said to them, "From this day forth you are to take proper care of our father; if you neglect this duty, we shall punish you." And they set the choicest viands before him.

As the result of the wholesome food which the Brahman had to eat and the comfortable quarters in which he slept, strength came back to him after a few days and his senses were refreshed. As he surveyed his person, he thought to himself, "I have gained this success through the monk Gotama." So desiring to make him a present, he took a pair of cloths and went to the Exalted One, and after exchanging friendly greetings, took his seat respectfully on one side. Then he laid the pair of cloths at the feet of the Exalted One, and said to him, "Sir Gotama, we Brahmans desire that a teacher shall receive the tribute which is his due; may my lord Gotama, my teacher, accept the tribute which is due to him as a teacher." Out of compassion for the Brahman, the Teacher accepted the present which he had brought, and preached the Law to him. At the conclusion of the sermon the Brahman was established in the Refuges. Thereupon the Brahman said to the Teacher, "Sir Gotama, my sons provide me regularly with four meals; two of these I give to you." The Teacher replied, "That is well, Brahman; but we shall go only to such houses as we please." So saying, he dismissed him.

The Brahman went home and said to his sons, "Dear sons, the monk [12] Gotama is my friend, and I have given him two of the meals with which you regularly provide me. When he arrives, be not heedless of your duty." "Very well," replied his sons, promising to do as he said. On the following day the Teacher set out on his alms-pilgrimage and stopped at the door of the house of the Brahman's oldest son. When the Brahman's oldest son saw the Teacher, he took his bowl, invited him into the house, seated him on a costly couch, and gave him the choicest of food. On the succeeding days the Teacher went to the houses of the other sons in order, and all of them provided hospitable entertainment for him in their houses.

One day when a holiday was at hand, the eldest son said to his father, "Dear father, in whose honor shall we make merry?" The Brahman replied, "The monk Gotama is my friend, and I know no others." "Well then, invite him for the morrow with his five hundred monks." The Brahman did so. So on the following day the Teacher came to the house with his attendant monks. The house was smeared with fresh cow-dung and decked in festive array. The Brahman provided seats within the house for the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, and served them with rich porridge sweetened with honey and with the choicest of food, both hard and soft. In the course of the meal the Brahman's four sons seated themselves before the Teacher and said to him, "Sir Gotama, we care tenderly for our father; we never neglect him. Just look at him!" The Teacher replied, "You have done well. Wise men of old likewise cared tenderly for their mother and father." [13] So saying, he related in detail the Mātuposaka Nāgarāja Jātaka,¹ found in the Eleventh Book, in which the story is told of how the sallakī-tree and ¹ Jātaka 455: iv. 90-95.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXIII. 4. ON MODERATION IN EATING ¹

So surely as a man yields to indolence. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to King Pasenadi Kosala.

For at a certain period of his life the king used to eat boiled rice cooked by the bucketful, and sauce and curry in proportion. One day after he had finished his breakfast, unable to shake off the drowsy feeling occasioned by over-eating, he went to see the Teacher and paced back and forth before him with a very weary look. [16] Overcome by drowsiness, unable to lie down and stretch himself out, he sat down on one side. Thereupon the Teacher asked him, “Did you come, great king, before you were well rested?” “Oh no, Reverend Sir,” replied the king, “but I always suffer greatly after eating a meal.” Then said the Teacher to him, “Great king, over-eating always brings suffering in its train.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

325. If a man gives way to indolence, eats overmuch,
Spends his time in sleep, and lies and rolls about
Like a great hog fed on grain,
Such a simpleton will enter the womb again and again. [17]

At the conclusion of the lesson the Teacher, desiring to help the king, pronounced the following Stanza,

If a man be ever mindful, if he observe moderation in taking food,
His sufferings will be but slight; he will grow old slowly, preserving his life.

The Teacher taught this Stanza to Prince Uttara and said to him, “Whenever the king sits down to eat, you must recite this Stanza to him, and by this means you must cause him to diminish his food.” In these words the Teacher told him just what means to employ. The prince did as he was directed. After a time the king was content with a pint-pot of rice at most, and became lean and cheerful. He established intimate relations with the Teacher and for seven days gave the Gifts Beyond Compare. When the Teacher pronounced the words of thanksgiving for the gifts presented to him by the king, the assembled multitude obtained great spiritual advantage.

¹ This story is an abbreviated version of Samyutta, iii. 2. 3: i. 81–82. Cf. Story xv. 6 (HOS. 30.76). Text: N iv. 15–17.

XXIII. 5. THE NOVICE AND THE OGRESS¹

This heart of mine once wandered. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the novice Sānu. [18]

Sānu, we are told, was the only son of a certain female lay disciple, who had him admitted to the Order when he was a mere boy. From the day of his admission to the Order, he was virtuous and faithful to duty. He performed faithfully all of the duties to a teacher, to a preceptor, and to visiting monks. On the eighth day of the month he would rise early in the morning, and after placing water in the inclosure reserved for water, would sweep the hall in which the Teacher preached, lay out the seats, and lighting a lamp, utter in a pleasing tone of voice the proclamation summoning the people to come and listen to the Law.

The monks, observing his faithfulness and diligence, desired often to hear him intone the Sacred Word, and would frequently request him so to do. And the novice would never reply, "My heart aches," or "My body is weary," or show any reluctance about complying with their request. But he would ascend the Seat of the Law and intone the Sacred Word as though he were bringing the Sacred River down from Heaven; and then he would descend and say, "All the merit I have acquired by thus intoning the Sacred Word, I make over to my mother and father."

Now his human mother and father [19] did not know that their son was making over to them the merit he acquired by intoning the Sacred Word. But his mother in the state of existence immediately preceding, had been reborn as an ogress. And she used to come with the deities and listen to the Law. And she would say, "Dear son, I thank you for the merit which as a novice you have made over to me." There is a saying, "A monk who keeps the precepts perfectly is dear both to the Worlds of the Gods and to the world of men." Therefore it was that the deities, full of respect and reverence for the novice, esteemed him even as Great Brahmā or as a flame of fire; and by reason of their reverence for the novice, revered and praised also the ogress his mother. When the ogres assembled to hear the Law, it was always to Mother of Sānu the ogress that they gave the first seat and the first water and the first pellet of food. Even powerful ogres, when they saw her, would step down from the road or rise from their seats.

¹ This story is an elaboration of Saṃyutta, x. 5: i. 208-209, and is taken almost word for word from Buddhaghosa's Commentary on the same. See Dhammapada Commentary, iv. 255, note 1. From the same source is also derived Thera-Gāthā Commentary, xlv. Cf. Dhammapada Commentary, xxvi. 21. Text: N iv. 18-25.

Now when the novice Sānu reached manhood and his physical powers became fully developed, he began to be oppressed with discontent. Unable to drive away discontent, one day, without saying a word to anyone, with hair and nails grown long and under and upper garments soiled and dirty, he took bowl and robe and went quite alone to the house of his mother. When the female lay disciple saw her son, she saluted him and said, “Dear son, [20] hitherto it has been your practice to come here with your teacher and your preceptor, or with other young monks and novices; why is it that you come here to-day quite alone?” The novice informed his mother that he was suffering from discontent. Upon this the faithful female lay disciple discoursed to her son on the manifold disadvantages of the household life. But in spite of her admonition she was unable to convince him.

Finally the thought occurred to her, “Perhaps, even without my urging him, he will come to his senses of his own accord.” So she said to him, “Remain here, dear son, until I procure you rice-gruel and boiled rice. When you have drunk the gruel and finished your meal, I will take down some pleasing garments and give them to you.” And preparing a seat, she gave it to her son. The novice sat down, and in a moment the lay disciple brought rice-gruel and hard food and gave them to him. Then saying to herself, “I will boil some rice for him,” she seated herself not far off and began to wash the rice.

Now at this time that ogress considered within herself, “Where is the novice? Is he receiving food in alms or not?” Perceiving that the novice was filled with a desire to return to the life of a layman, and that for this reason he had gone and seated himself in his mother’s house, she thought to herself, “If I gain possession of the novice, I shall be treated with respect by the powerful deities; I will therefore go to the novice and prevent him from returning to the life of a layman.” Accordingly the ogress went and took possession of the body of the novice, twisted his neck, and felled him to the ground. With rolling eyes and foaming mouth, he lay quivering on the earth. [21]

When the female lay disciple saw the plight of her son, she ran

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

My son, people weep for him who is dead, or for him who, although alive, is no more seen.

And for him who, after renouncing the pleasures of sense, returns to the world again,

For him also they weep, my son. For he that was alive is dead again. [23]

His mother, having thus spoken, compared the household life to a bed of glowing coals, even to hell, and pointing out once more the disadvantages of the household life, said,

There are glowing coals on both sides, dear son; do you wish to fall into glowing coals?

There are hells on both sides, dear son; do you wish to fall into hell?

Then said his mother to him, "Son, good luck to you! But this my son, whom I snatched from the burning like household goods, and who retired from the world in the Religion of the Buddha, desires again to burn in the household life. Hurry hither and protect us!" Then she thought, "Is there no way by which I can arouse his disgust? Is there no way by which I can arouse his repugnance?" And to make the matter clear, she pronounced the following Stanza, Hurry hither! Luck to you! How can we arouse your disgust?

Goods snatched from the burning, you desire to burn again.

As his mother spoke, Sānu came to his senses and said, "I have no use for the household life." His mother replied, "Good, my son!" And pleased at heart, she gave him choice food to eat. Then she asked him, "How old are you, my son?" Knowing that he was old enough to be admitted to full membership in the Order, she provided him with a set of three robes. With bowl and robes complete he was admitted to full membership in the Order.

The Teacher, since the youth had but recently been admitted to full membership in the Order, urged him to make strenuous exertion to control his thoughts, [24] and said to him, "If a man allows his thoughts to wander hither and thither for a long time, dwelling on all manner of objects, and makes no effort to control them, it is impossible for him to attain Salvation. Therefore a man should put forth every effort to control his thoughts, even as an elephant-driver controls an elephant in rut with his hook." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

326. These thoughts of mine once wandered hither and thither
Wherever they liked, wherever they desired, wherever they pleased;
But hereafter I shall control them perfectly,
Even as an elephant-driver controls an elephant in rut with his hook. [25]

At the conclusion of the lesson many deities who came with Sānu to hear the Law, obtained Comprehension of the Law. Venerable Sānu mastered the Tipiṭaka, the Word of the Buddha. He became a mighty preacher of the Law, lived a hundred and twenty years, stirred up the whole Land of the Rose-apple, and finally passed into Nibbāna.

XXIII. 6. AN ELEPHANT STICKS FAST IN THE MUD ¹

Be joyful in heedfulness. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to an elephant named Pāveyyaka (Baddheraka), which belonged to the king of Kosala.

The story goes that this elephant possessed great strength in his younger days, but in the course of time, worn out by old age and buffeted by the wind, he waded one day into a great lake, stuck fast in the mire, and was unable to get out. The populace saw him and began to talk about him, saying, "To think that an elephant once so powerful should become so weak!" The king heard the news and immediately gave orders to his elephant-trainer as follows, "Trainer, go extricate this elephant from the mire." So the elephant-trainer went to the lake, showed himself to the elephant with his head arrayed as for battle, and caused the battle-drum to be beaten.

The pride of the elephant was immediately aroused. He rose quickly, walked up out of the lake, and stood on dry land. The monks saw the occurrence and told the Teacher. Said the Teacher, "Monks, this elephant has just extricated himself from what was but a quagmire of ordinary mud. [26] But you have flung yourselves headlong into the quagmire of the evil passions. Therefore strive with all your might to extricate yourselves therefrom." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, 327. Be joyful in heedfulness, guard well your thoughts.

Extricate yourselves from the quagmire, even as an elephant that is stuck fast in the mud.

XXIII. 7. AN ELEPHANT WAITS UPON THE BUDDHA ²

Should one find. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Protected Forest near Pārileyyaka, with reference to a company of monks. [27] The story occurs in the Yamaka Vagga in the Commentary on the Stanzas beginning with the words, The others do not understand. For it is there said:

¹ Text: N iv. 25-26.

² Cf. Story i. 5 b (text: i 60¹²-63¹⁶). Text: N iv. 26-31.

It became known all over the Land of the Rose-apple that the Teacher was residing in Protected Forest, attended by a noble elephant. From the city of Sāvatti, Anāthapiṇḍika, Visākhā, the eminent female lay disciple, and other such great personages sent the following message to the Elder Ānanda, “Reverend Sir, obtain for us the privilege of seeing the Teacher.” Likewise five hundred monks residing abroad approached the Elder Ānanda at the conclusion of the rainy season and made the following request, “It is a long time, Ānanda, since we have heard a discourse on the Law from the lips of the Exalted One. We should like, brother Ānanda, if you please, to have the privilege of hearing a discourse on the Law from the lips of the Exalted One.”

So the Elder took those monks with him and went to Protected Forest. When he reached the forest, he thought to himself, “The Tathāgata has resided in solitude for a period of three months. It is therefore not fitting that I should approach him all at once with so many monks as I have with me.” Accordingly he approached the Teacher quite alone. When the elephant Pārileyyaka saw the Elder, he took his staff and rushed forward. The Teacher looked around and said to the elephant, “Come back, Pārileyyaka; do not drive him away. He is a servitor of the Buddha.” The elephant immediately threw away his staff, and requested the privilege of taking the Elder’s bowl and robe. The Elder refused. The elephant thought to himself, “If he is versed in the rules of etiquette, he will refrain from placing his own monastic requisites on the stone slab where the Teacher is accustomed to sit.” The Elder placed his bowl and robe on the ground. (For those who are versed in the rules of etiquette never place their own monastic requisites on the seat or bed of their spiritual superiors.) The Elder, after saluting the Teacher, [28] seated himself on one side.

The Teacher asked him, “Did you come alone?” The Elder informed him that he had come with five hundred monks. “But where are they?” asked the Teacher. “I did not know how you would feel about it, and therefore I left them outside and came in alone.” “Tell them to come in.” The Elder did so. The Teacher exchanged friendly greetings with the monks. Then the monks said to the Teacher,

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

And this thing which is called sovereignty is an occasion of heedlessness. If he does exercise sovereignty, I may be able to catch him off his guard. I will therefore go and arouse his ambition.”

Accordingly Māra the Evil One approached the Teacher and said, “Reverend Sir, let the Exalted One exercise sovereignty; let the Happy One exercise sovereignty, without killing or causing to kill, without conquering or causing to conquer, without sorrow or causing sorrow, with justice and righteousness.” Said the Teacher to Māra, “Evil One, what do you see in me that makes you speak thus to me?” Said Māra to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, the Exalted One has developed to the full the Four Bases of Magic Power. For should the Exalted One resolve, ‘Let the Himālaya, king of mountains, be turned to gold,’ gold would that mountain be. I too will do with this wealth all those things which can be done with wealth. Thus you shall rule justly and righteously.” Then said the Teacher,

The whole of a mountain of gold, even of fine gold,
Were not enough for one. Knowing this, a man should walk justly. [33]

How can a man who has seen whence arises suffering devote himself to the pleasures of sense?
Let the man who has come to know that substratum of being which is called “attachment” in the world, train himself to subdue this alone.

With these Stanzas did the Teacher arouse and alarm Māra the Evil One. Then he said to him, “I will admonish you yet again, Evil One. I have nothing in common with you. Thus do I admonish you.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

331. When need arises, pleasant are companions;
Pleasant is enjoyment, when one shares it with another;
Works of merit give pleasure at the hour of death;
Pleasant is it to leave behind all suffering.
332. Pleasant is motherhood in this world, and pleasant is fatherhood;
Pleasant is the estate of a monk in this world, and pleasant is the estate of a Brahman.
333. Pleasant is a life of righteousness unto old age, pleasant is faith firmly established, Pleasant is the attainment of wisdom, pleasant is the avoiding of evil.

BOOK XXIV. THIRST OR CRAVING, TANHĀ VAGGA

XXIV. 1. REDFISH ¹

If a man walk in heedlessness. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Redfish, Kapilamaccha. [37]

1 a. Story of the Past: The insolent monk. The bandits

The story goes that in times long past, when Exalted Kassapa passed into Nibbāna, two brothers of respectable family retired from the world and became monks under their disciples. The name of the older brother was Sodhana, and that of the younger was Red, Kapila. Likewise their mother Sādhinī and their younger sister Tāpanā retired from the world and became nuns. After the two brothers had become monks, they performed regularly and faithfully the major and minor duties to their teachers and their preceptors. One day they asked the following question, “Reverend Sir, how many Burdens are there in this Religion?” and received the following answer, “There are two Burdens: the Burden of Study and the Burden of Meditation.” Thereupon the older brother said, “I will fulfill the Burden of Meditation,” and for five years kept residence with his teacher and his preceptor. Obtaining a Subject of Meditation leading to Arahatsip, he entered the forest, and after striving and struggling with might and main, attained Arahatsip.

Said the younger brother, “I am young yet; when I am old, I will fulfill the Burden of Meditation.” [38] Accordingly he assumed the Burden of Study and learned by heart the Three Piṭakas. By his knowledge of the Texts, he gained a great following, and through his following, rich offerings. Drunk with the intoxication of great learning, and overcome with craving for gain, he was led by overweening pride of knowledge to pronounce a thing said by others, even when it was right, to be wrong; even when wrong, to be right: even when it was innocent, to be sinful; even when sinful, to be innocent. The kindly monks used to say to him, “Brother Kapila, do not speak thus;" and would admonish him, quoting to him the Doctrine and the Discipline. But Kapila would reply, "What do you know, empty-fists?" and would go about snubbing and disparaging others.

¹ Cf. Udāna, iii. 3: 24–27; Thera-Gāthā Commentary, clxxviii. Text: N iv. 37–46.

The monks reported the matter to his brother, Elder Sodhana. Sodhana went to him and said, "Brother Kapila, for men such as you, right conduct is the life of religion; therefore you should not abandon right conduct, reject that which is right and proper and speak as you do." Thus did Sodhana admonish his brother Kapila. But the latter paid no attention to what he said. However, Sodhana admonished him two or three times, but seeing that he paid no attention to his words, left him, saying, "Well, brother, you will become notorious for your doings." [39] And from that time on, the rest of the kindly monks would have nothing to do with him.

Thus did the monk Kapila adopt an evil mode of conduct and go about with companions confirmed like himself in an evil mode of conduct. One day he said to himself, "I will recite the Pātimokkha in the Hall of Discipline." So taking a fan and seating himself in the Seat of the Law, he recited the Pātimokkha, asking the usual question, "Brethren, are there, among the monks who are here gathered together, any who have anything to confess?" The monks thought, "What is the use of giving this fellow an answer?" Observing that the monks all remained silent, he said, "Brethren, there is no Doctrine or Discipline; what difference does it make whether you hear the Pātimokkha or not?" So saying, he arose from the seat. Thus did he retard the teaching of the Word of Exalted Kassapa.

Elder Sodhana attained Nibbāna in that very state of existence. As for Kapila, at the end of his allotted term of life, he was reborn in the Great Hell of Avīci. Kapila's mother and sister followed his example, reviled and abused the kindly monks, and were reborn in that same Hell.

Now at that time there were five hundred men who made a living by plundering villages. One day the men of the countryside pursued them, whereupon they fled and entered the forest. Seeing no refuge there, and meeting a certain forest hermit, they saluted him and said to him, "Reverend Sir, be our refuge." The Elder replied, "For you there is no refuge like the Precepts of Morality. [40] Do you take upon yourselves, all of you, the Five Precepts." "Very well," agreed the bandits, and took upon themselves the Five Precepts. Then the Elder admonished them, saying, "Now that you have taken upon yourselves the Precepts, not even for the sake of saving your lives,

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Teacher will know the reason why this fish has a golden hue.” So ordering the fish to be carried for him, he went to the Teacher. As soon as the fish opened his mouth, the whole Jetavana stank. The king asked the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, how did this fish come to have a golden hue? And why is it that he has a stinking breath?”

“Great king, in the dispensation of Exalted Kassapa this fish was a monk named Kapila, and Kapila was very learned and had a large following. But he was overcome with desire of gain, and would abuse and revile those who would not take him at his word. Thus did he retard the Religion of Exalted Kassapa, [42] was therefore reborn in the Avīci Hell, and because the fruit of his evil deed has not yet been exhausted, has just been reborn as a fish. Now since for a long time he preached the Word of the Buddha and recited the praises of the Buddha, for this cause he has received a golden hue. But because he reviled and abused the monks, for this cause he has come to have a stinking breath. I will let him speak for himself, great king.”

“Reverend Sir, by all means let him speak for himself.”

So the Teacher asked the fish, “Are you Kapila?” “Yes, Reverend Sir, I am Kapila.” “Where have you come from?” “From the Great Hell of Avīci, Reverend Sir.” “What became of your older brother Sodhana?” “He passed into Nibbāna, Reverend Sir.” “But what became of your mother Sādhinī?” “She was reborn in Hell, Reverend Sir.” “And what became of your younger sister Tāpanā?” “She was reborn in Hell, Reverend Sir.” “Where shall you go now?” “Into the Great Hell of Avīci, Reverend Sir.” So saying, the fish, overcome with remorse, struck his head against the boat, died then and there, and was reborn in Hell. The multitude that stood by were greatly excited, insomuch that the hair of their bodies stood on end. At that moment the Exalted One, perceiving the disposition of mind of the company there assembled, preached the Law in a way suiting the occasion:

A life of righteousness, a life of holiness,
This they call the gem of highest worth.

Beginning with these words, the Teacher recited in full the Kapila Sutta, found in the Sutta Nipāta.¹ Having so done, he pronounced the following Stanzas, [43]

334. If a man walk in heedlessness, Craving grows within him, like the creeper;
He floats from life to life, like a monkey seeking fruit in a forest.

¹ Kapila (or Dhammacariya) Sutta, Sutta Nipāta, ii. 6 (Stanzas 274–283).

335. Whosoever is overcome by this fierce Craving of attachment for the world,
The sorrows of such a man increase, like the luxuriant bīraṇa grass.
336. But whosoever overcomes this fierce Craving, difficult to overcome in this world, Sorrows roll off from him, like a drop of water from a lotus leaf.
337. Therefore, with your kind permission, I say this to you, to all as many as are here gathered together:
Dig up the root of Craving, even as he who seeks the fragrant usīra root digs up the bīraṇa grass,
Lest Māra crush you again and again, as a stream crushes reeds.

XXIV. 2. THE YOUNG SOW¹

Even as a tree. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to a certain young sow which wallowed in dung. [46]

The story goes that one day, as the Teacher was entering Rājagaha for alms, seeing a young sow, he smiled. Elder Ānanda, seeing the circle of light which proceeded from his teeth and came forth from his open mouth, asked the Teacher his reason for smiling, saying, “Reverend Sir, what is the cause of your smile?” The Teacher said to him, “Ānanda, just look at that young sow!” “I see her, Reverend Sir.”

“In the dispensation of Exalted Kakusandha she was a hen that lived in the neighborhood of a certain Hall of Assembly. She used to listen to a certain monk who lived the life of contemplation, as he repeated a Formula of Meditation leading to Insight. Merely from hearing the sound of those sacred words, when she passed out of that state of existence, she was reborn in the royal household as a princess named Ubbari.

“One day she went to the privy and saw a heap of maggots. [47] Then and there, by gazing upon the maggots, she formed the conception of maggots and entered into the First Trance. After remaining in that state of existence during the term of life allotted to her, she passed out of that state of existence and was reborn in the World of Brahmā. Passing from that state of existence, buffeted by rebirth, she has now been reborn as a young sow. It was because I knew these circumstances that I smiled.”

As the monks led by Elder Ānanda listened to the Teacher, they were deeply moved. The Teacher, having stirred their emotions, proclaimed the folly of Craving, and even as he stood there in the middle of the street, pronounced the following Stanzas,

¹ Cf. Rogers, Buddhaghosha's Parables, xii, pp. 105–106. Text: N iv. 46–51.

338. As a tree, though it be cut down, grows up again if its root be sound and firm, So also, if the inclination to Craving be not destroyed, this suffering springs up again and again in this world.
339. He that is in the tow of the six and thirty powerful currents running unto pleasure,
Such a man, misguided, the waves of desires inclining unto lust sweep away.
340. The currents run in all directions; the creeper buds and shoots;
When you see the creeper grown, be wise and cut the root.
341. Flowing and unctuous are a creature's joys;
Men devote themselves to pleasure and seek after happiness;
Therefore do they undergo birth and decay.
342. Pursued by Craving, men dart hither and thither like a hunted hare;
Held fast by fetters and bonds, they undergo suffering repeatedly and long. [48]
343. Pursued by Craving, men dart hither and thither like a hunted hare.
Therefore a monk should banish Craving, desiring for himself freedom from lust. [50]

The young sow, after passing out of that state of existence, was reborn in Suvannabhūmi in the royal household. Passing from that state of existence, she was reborn at Benāres; passing from that state of existence, she was reborn at Suppāraka Port in the household of a dealer in horses, then at Kavīra Port in the household of a mariner. Passing from that state of existence, she was reborn in Anurādhapura in the household of a nobleman of high rank. Passing from that state of existence, she was reborn in the South Country in the village of Bhokkanta as the daughter of a householder named Sumana, being named Sumanā after her father.

When this village was deserted by its inhabitants, her father went to the kingdom of Dīghavāpi, and took up his residence in the village of Mahāmuni. Hither came on some errand or other Lakunṭaka Atimbara, minister of King Duṭṭhagāmaṇī, and meeting her, married her with great pomp, and took her with him to live in the village of Mahāpuṇṇa. One day Elder Anula, whose residence was the Mahā Vihāra of Koṭipabbata, stopped at the door of her house as he was going his round for alms, and seeing her, spoke thus to the monks, "Brethren, what a wonderful thing that a young sow should become the wife of Lakunṭaka Atimbara, prime minister of the king!" [51]

When she heard his words, she uncovered her past states of existence, and she received the power of remembering previous births.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

The story goes that this monk, a fellow-resident of Elder Kassapa the Great, after entering into the Four Trances, saw various objects pleasing to the eye in the house of his own uncle, who was a goldsmith, formed an attachment for them, and returned to the world. But he was so lazy that he refused to do any work, and therefore they put him out of the house. Thereupon he began to associate with evil companions, and made a living by going about committing acts of brigandage. One day they caught him, bound his arms tightly behind his back, and led him to the place of execution, beating him with lashes at every four-corners.

The Elder, entering the city to make his round for alms, saw the renegade monk being led out by the South Gate, caused his bonds to be loosened, and said to him, "Consider once more the Subject of Meditation you formerly employed." The renegade monk complied with his admonition, applied himself to meditation, and developed the Fourth Trance once more. His captors led him to the place of execution, said to him, "We are going to kill you," and began to heat the spikes. The bandit showed neither fear nor perturbation. The executioners took their places on all sides round about, and raised weapons, swords, spears, and lances.

But when they observed that the brigand exhibited no signs of fear, they exclaimed, "Sirs, just look at this man! Though he stands in the midst of many hundred men holding weapons in their hands, he neither trembles nor quakes. What a wonderful thing it is!" And filled with wonder and amazement, they shouted at the top of their lungs, and then went and reported the matter to the king. When the king learned of the circumstances, he said, "Release the man." Then [53] they went to the Teacher and reported the matter to him. The Teacher sent forth a radiant image of himself, and preaching the Law, pronounced the following Stanza,

344. He who, free from desire, inclines to desire;
 He who, released from desire, runs back to desire;
 That man, — come, behold him; released, he runs back to bondage.

Now on hearing this doctrinal instruction, the renegade monk, even as he lay on the tips of the spikes, surrounded by the king's men, began to meditate on birth and death, applied the Three Characteristics, and, mastering the Elements of Being, attained the Fruit of Conversion. And experiencing the bliss of Attainment, he rose into the air, proceeded through the air to the Teacher, saluted the Teacher, and in the midst of the assembled company, which included the king, attained Arahatsip.

XXIV. 4. THE PRISON-HOUSE ¹

That bond is not strong. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the prison-house.

The story goes that once upon a time criminals, house-breakers, highwaymen, [54] and murderers, were brought before the king of Kosala. The king ordered them to be bound with fetters, ropes, and chains. Now thirty country monks, desiring to see the Teacher, came and saw the Teacher, saluted him and took their leave. On the following day, as they went about Sāvatti for alms, they came to the prison-house and saw those criminals. Returning from their rounds for alms, they approached the Teacher at eventide and said to him, “Reverend Sir, to-day, as we were making our rounds for alms, we saw many criminals in the prison-house. They were bound with fetters, ropes, and chains, and were experiencing much suffering. They cannot break these fetters and escape. Is there any bond stronger than these bonds?”

In reply to their question, the Teacher said, “Monks, what do these bonds amount to? Consider the bond of the evil passions, the bond which is called craving, the bond of attachment for wealth, crops, sons, and wives. This is a bond a hundredfold, nay, a thousandfold stronger than these bonds which you have seen. But strong as it is, and hard to break, wise men of old broke it, and going to the Himālaya country, retired from the world.” So saying, he related the following

4 a. Story of the Past: Husband and wife

In times long past, when Brahmadata was ruling at Benāres, the Future Buddha was reborn in the family of a certain poor householder. When he reached manhood, his father died; so he worked for hire and supported his mother. His mother, in spite of his protests, brought him a certain daughter of respectable family to wife. After a time his mother died. In the course of time his wife conceived a child in her womb.

¹ This story is almost word for word the same as Jātaka 201: ii. 139-141. Text: N iv. 53-57.

Not knowing that she had conceived a child, the husband said to the wife, “Dear wife, make your living by working for hire; I intend to become a monk.” [55] Thereupon the wife said to the husband, “I have conceived a child in my womb. Wait until I give birth to the child and you see him, and then become a monk.” “Very well,” said the husband, promising to do so.

When the wife had given birth to her child, the husband took leave of her, saying, “Dear wife, you have given birth to your child in safety; now I shall become a monk.” But the wife replied, “Just wait until your son has been weaned from the breast.” While the husband waited, the wife conceived a second child.

The husband thought to himself, “If I do as she wishes me to, I shall never get away; I will run away and become a monk without so much as saying a word to her about it.” So without saying so much as a word to his wife about his plans, he rose up in the night and fled away. The city guards caught him. But he persuaded them to release him, saying to them, “Masters, I have a mother to support; release me.”

After tarrying in a certain place he went to the Himālaya country and adopted the life of an anchorite. Having developed the Supernatural Faculties and the Higher Attainments, he dwelt there, diverting himself with the diversion of the Trances. And as he dwelt there, he thought to himself, “I have broken this bond which is so hard to break, the bond of the evil passions, the bond of attachment for son and wife.” So saying, he breathed forth a Solemn Utterance. End of Story of the Past.

Having related this Story of the Past, the Teacher, making plain the Solemn Utterance breathed forth by the anchorite, pronounced the following Stanzas,

345. That bond is not strong, say the wise, which is made of iron or of wood or of babbaja;

Stronger far is the bond of passionate devotion to jewels and rings, to sons and wives.

346. That bond is indeed strong, say the wise,

Which, although loose, drags men down, and is hard to untie;

By cutting this bond and retiring from the world,

Men win freedom from desire and leave behind them the pleasures of sense.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

material form!” The Teacher perceived the course of her thoughts and said to her, “Khemā, you falsely think, ‘There is reality in beauty of form.’ Behold now the unreality thereof!” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

Khemā, behold this aggregation of elements, diseased, impure, decaying, Trickling and oozing, desired of simpletons.

At the conclusion of the Stanza Khemā was established in the Fruit of Conversion. Then said the Teacher to her, “Khemā, living beings here in the world, dyed with lust, corrupted with hatred, deluded with delusion, cannot cross the stream of their own craving, but stick fast therein.” And preaching the Law, he pronounced the following Stanza,

347. They that are dyed with lust follow the stream of the passions
As a spider runs down the web he has spun for himself.
Wise men, by cutting this bond and going forth from the world,
Win freedom from desire and leave behind all suffering. [59]

At the conclusion of the lesson Khemā was established in Arahatship; the multitude also profited by the lesson.

Said the Teacher to the king, “Great king, Khemā ought either to retire from the world or to pass into Nibbāna.” The king replied, “Reverend Sir, admit her to the Order; as for Nibbāna, never!” She retired from the world and became one of the Teacher’s foremost female lay disciples.

XXIV. 6. THE YOUTH WHO MARRIED A FEMALE ACROBAT¹

Give up the things of the past. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Uggasena.

The story goes that once a year, or once every six months, five hundred tumblers used to visit Rājagaha and give performances for seven days before the king. By these performances they earned much gold and money; in fact there was no end to the gifts tossed at them from time to time. The people stood on beds piled on top of beds, and watched the tumblers perform their feats.

One day a certain female tumbler climbed a pole, turned somer-

¹ Text: N iv. 59–65.

saults thereon, and balancing herself on the tip of the pole, danced and sang as she trod the air. [60] Now on this occasion a certain treasurer's son, accompanied by a companion, stood on top of a pile of beds watching her. The grace and skill with which she managed her hands and feet attracted his attention, and he straightway fell in love with her. He went home and said, "If I can have her, I shall live; but if I cannot have her, I will die right here." So saying, he flung himself down on his bed and refused to take food.

His mother and father asked him, "Son, what ails you?" The son replied, "If I can have that tumbler's daughter, I can live; if I cannot have her, I will die right here." Said his mother and father, "Do not act in this way. We will bring you another maiden, our equal in birth and wealth." But he made the same reply as before and remained lying in bed. His father argued with him at length, but was unable to make him see things in a better light. Finally he sent for his son's friend, gave him a thousand pieces of money, and sent him off, saying to him, "Tell the tumbler to take this money and give his daughter to my son."

"I will not give my daughter for money," replied the tumbler, "but if it be true that he cannot live without my daughter, then let him travel about with us; if he will do this, I will give him my daughter." The mother and father communicated this information to their son. The son immediately said, "Of course I will travel about with them." His mother and father begged him not to do so, but he paid no attention to anything they said, and went and joined the tumbler.

The tumbler gave him his daughter in marriage, and traveled about with him through villages, market-towns, and royal cities, giving exhibitions everywhere. In no long time the female tumbler, after living with her husband, gave birth to a son. As she played with the boy, she would address him as "son of a cart-driver," or "son of a fetcher of wood and drawer of water," or "son of a know-nothing." It appears that the husband used to attend to everything relating to their carts. Wherever they halted, he would fetch grass for the oxen. Wherever they gave an exhibition, he would procure whatever apparatus was required, set it up, and remove it. [61]

It was with reference to duties such as these performed by her husband that this woman employed such terms as these in playing with her son. The husband came to the conclusion that the songs she sang were about himself, and asked her, "Do you refer to me?" "Yes, I refer to you." "In that case I will run away and leave you."

“What difference does it make to me whether you go away or not?” replied the wife. And over and over again she sang the same song. It appears that by reason of the beauty she possessed and the large amount of money she earned, she was utterly indifferent to him.

“Why is it that she is so proud?” thought the husband to himself. Straightway he perceived within himself, “It is because of her skill as a tumbler.” So he thought to himself, “Very well! I will learn tumbling-feats myself.” Accordingly he went to his father-in-law and learned all the feats that he knew. And he exhibited his art in villages, market-towns, and royal cities, one after another, until finally he came to Rājagaha. And he caused proclamation to be made throughout the city, “Seven days hence Uggasena the treasurer’s son will exhibit his art to the residents of the city.” The residents of the city caused platform above platform to be erected, and assembled on the seventh day. Uggasena climbed a pole sixty cubits in height and balanced himself on the top of it.

On that day, as the Teacher surveyed the world at dawn, he perceived that Uggasena had entered the Net of his Knowledge. And he considered within himself, “What will become of him?” Straightway he became aware of the following, “The treasurer’s son will balance himself on the tip of the pole for the purpose of displaying his skill, and a great multitude will assemble for the purpose of witnessing his exhibition. At this point I will pronounce a Stanza consisting of four verses. Hearing this Stanza, eighty-four thousand living beings will obtain Comprehension of the Law, and Uggasena himself will be established in Arahatsip.” So on the following day, taking note of the time, the Teacher set out, attended by the Congregation of Monks, and entered the city of Rājagaha for alms.

A moment before the Teacher entered the city, Uggasena motioned to the multitude as a sign for applause, [62] and balancing himself on the tip of the pole, turned seven somersaults in the air, lighted on his feet, and balanced himself once more on the tip of the pole. At that moment the Teacher entered the city, and so contrived that the multitude looked not at Uggasena, but at himself. When Uggasena looked at the audience and perceived that they were not looking at him at all, he was overwhelmed with disappointment. Thought he, “Here is a feat which it has taken me a year to perfect, but when the Teacher enters the city, the audience, instead of looking at me, looks at the Teacher. My exhibition has failed completely.” The Teacher, perceiving the thought that was passing through his mind, addressed

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies severed the Attachments, have no fear or perturbation.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [64]

397. He that has severed every attachment, he that trembles not,
He that is past the bonds and is unshackled, such a man I call a Brahman.

Again one day the monks began the following discussion in the Hall of Truth: “Brethren, how did it happen that a monk, endowed as was this monk with the faculties requisite for the attainment of Arahatsip, traveled about with tumblers for the sake of a tumbler’s daughter? And how did it happen that he was endowed with the faculties requisite for the attainment of Arahatsip?” The Teacher drew near and asked them, “Monks, what is the subject you are discussing as you sit here all gathered together?” When they told him, he said, “Monks, both of these things happened through one and the same circumstance.” And to make the matter clear, he related the following

6 a. Story of the Past: A joke in earnest

The story goes that in times long past, while the golden shrine for the relics of the Buddha Kassapa was building, the children of certain respectable families living in Benāres loaded carts with an abundant supply of food and set out for the shrine to do the work of laborers. As they proceeded, they saw by the way a certain Elder entering the city for alms. Now a certain young woman looked at the Elder and said to her husband, “Husband, our noble Elder is entering the city for alms, and there is an abundant supply of food both hard and soft in our cart. Fetch his bowl, and let us give him food.” Her husband fetched the Elder’s bowl, and when they had filled it with food both hard and soft, they placed it in the hands of the Elder, and both husband and wife made the following Earnest Wish, “Reverend Sir, may be we partakers of the Truth you have seen.”

Now this Elder was an Arahatsip, and therefore looked into the future to see whether their Earnest Wish would be fulfilled. And perceiving that it would be fulfilled, he smiled. The woman noticed the smile and said to her husband, “Husband, our noble Elder smiled; he must be some actor.” [65] Her husband replied, “He must be indeed, my dear wife,” and passed on. This was their deed in a former birth. End of Story of the Past.

Remaining in this state of existence during the term of life allotted to them, they were reborn in the World of the Gods, and passing from that state of existence in the dispensation of the present Buddha, that woman was reborn in the household of a tumbler, the man in the household of a treasurer. Because he returned the reply, "He must be indeed, my dear wife," he traveled about with actors; and because he gave a portion of food to an Elder who was an Arahāt, he attained Arahātship. The tumbler's daughter said to herself, "Whatsoever future estate my husband shall attain, that will I also attain." So saying, she retired from the world and became established in Arahātship.

XXIV. 7. YOUNG ARCHER THE WISE ¹

If a man be agitated by doubt. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain young monk, Young Archer the Wise, Culla Dhanuggaha Paṇḍita.

The story goes that once upon a time a young monk took the ticket that fell to him, obtained Ticket-porridge, went to the Assembly Hall, but finding no water there, went to a certain house for the purpose of obtaining water. There a young woman saw him, and no sooner saw him than fell in love with him. "Reverend Sir," said she, "should you again require water, pray come right here; go nowhere else."

After that, whenever he failed to obtain drinking water, he went to her house and never went anywhere else. And she would take his bowl and give him water for drinking. As time went on, she gave him rice-gruel also. Again one day she provided a seat for him right there and gave him boiled rice. And seating herself near him, she started up a conversation, saying, [66] "Reverend Sir, it is very lonely indeed in this house; we never see so much as a traveler." After listening to her talk for a few days, the young monk became discontented.

One day some visiting monks saw him and asked him, "Brother, how comes it that you are so very yellow?" "Brethren, I am discontented." So they took him to his teacher and his preceptor. His teacher and his preceptor took him to the Teacher and reported the matter to him. The Teacher asked, “Monk, is the statement true that you are discontented?” “It is true,” replied the young monk. Then said the Teacher, “Monk, how comes it that after retiring from the world in the Religion of a Buddha so vigorous as I, instead of causing it to be said of you that you have attained the Fruit of Conversion or the Fruit of the Second Path, you allow it to be said of you that you are discontented? You are guilty of a grievous sin.” Continuing, the Teacher asked the young monk, “Why are you discontented?” “Reverend Sir, a certain woman said this and that to me.”

¹ This story is a free version of Jātaka 374: iii. 219-224. Cf. also Jātaka 425: iii. 474-478; and Tibetan Tales, xii: 227-235. Text: N iv. 65-69.

“Monk, it is not at all strange that she should do such a thing as this. For in a previous state of existence, she forsook Dhanuggaha, the wisest man in all India, and conceiving a passion for a certain bandit on the spur of the moment, slew her husband.” The monks asked the Teacher to make the matter clear, and in compliance with their request, he related the following

7 a. Story of the Past: Young Archer the Wise

In times past there lived a certain wise man named Young Archer the Wise, Culla Dhanuggaha. He acquired the arts and crafts at Takkasilā under a world-renowned teacher. His teacher was so pleased with the progress he made that he gave him his daughter in marriage. Young Archer the Wise took his wife and set out for Benāres. At the entrance to the forest he slew fifty bandits with fifty arrows. When his arrows were all gone, he seized the leader of the bandits and hurled him to the ground. “Wife, bring me my sword!” cried he. But the moment his wife saw that bandit, she conceived a passion for him, and placed the hilt of the sword in the hand of the bandit. The bandit straightway slew Young Archer the Wise. Then he took the woman with him and went his way.

As he proceeded on his way, he thought to himself, “Should this woman see another man, she will kill me too just as she did her husband. [67] What use have I for such a woman?” Seeing a certain river, he left the woman on the near bank, took her ornaments, and said, “Remain where you are until I carry your ornaments across.” Then and there he left her. When the woman discovered that the bandit had left her, she said, Brahman, you have taken all my ornaments and crossed to the other side.

Return speedily, quickly; now take me too to the other side.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

349. If a man be agitated by doubt, if strong passion sway him, if he seek only that which is pleasing, Craving will increase the more; he only strengthens the bond which holds him.
350. But whosoever takes delight in suppressing doubt, and ever mindful, meditates on that which is not pleasing,
Such a man will destroy, such a man will cleave the bond of Māra.

XXIV. 8. MĀRA SEEKS IN VAIN TO FRIGHTEN RĀHULA ¹

He that has reached perfection. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Māra. [69]

For one day several Elders entered the Jetavana monastery at an unseasonable hour, and going to the quarters of Elder Rāhula, woke him up. Rāhula, seeing no other place to sleep, went and lay down in front of the Tathāgata's Perfumed Chamber. This Venerable Elder, although he was but eight years old, had already attained Arahatsip. As Māra Vasavatti, keeping his natural form, beheld this Venerable Elder lying in front of the Perfumed Chamber, he thought to himself, "The son of the monk Gotama lies without the Perfumed Chamber, as though his finger hurt him; the monk himself reclines within the Perfumed Chamber, and if the finger of his son be pinched, he himself [70] will feel a pinching." So Māra took the form of a gigantic elephant-king, and drawing near the Elder, encircled the head of the Elder with his trunk, and with a loud voice trumpeted the Heron's Call. The Teacher, even as he reclined in the Perfumed Chamber, perceived that it was Māra, and said, "Māra, with a hundred thousand like yourself, it would be impossible for you to frighten my son. My son is unafraid, devoid of Craving, of mighty vigor, of great wisdom." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

351. He that has reached perfection, he that is unafraid, free from Craving, devoid of lust,
He that has cut out the arrows of being, such a man has reached his last state of existence.
352. He that is free from Craving, he that is without attachment,
He that is skilled to interpret words in the old dialect,
He that knows the order of the letters from first to last,
Such a man has received his last body, such a man is a great sage, a great man. [71]

¹ Text: N iv. 69–71.

At the conclusion of the lesson many obtained the Fruit of Conversion and the Fruits of the Second and Third Paths. Māra the Evil One said to himself, "The monk Gotama knows me," and then and there disappeared.

XXIV. 9. THE SKEPTICAL ASCETIC ¹

I have overcome all things. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher with reference to the Ājīvaka ascetic Upaka, whom he met by the way. [72]

For on a certain occasion the Teacher, having attained Omniscience, having spent seven weeks at the Throne of Wisdom, took his own bowl and robe, and set out on the road leading to Benāres eighteen leagues distant, that he might there set in motion the Wheel of the Law. As he walked along the road, he saw a certain lay disciple of the Ājīvaka Order. When the Ājīvaka ascetic saw the Teacher, he asked him, "Brother, your senses are tranquil, your complexion is bright and clear. In whose name have you retired from the world? Who is your teacher? Whose doctrine do you profess?" The Teacher replied, "I have no preceptor or teacher." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, 353. I have overcome all things, and know all things.

In all the conditions of life I am free from taint.

I have renounced all, and by the destruction of Craving have attained Emancipation.

Since by myself I have attained Supernatural Knowledge, to whom can I point as my teacher?

At the conclusion of the lesson Upaka the Ājīvaka expressed neither approval nor disapproval of the words which the Tathāgata had spoken, but shaking his head and wagging his tongue, set out on a by-path, and went to the abode of a certain hunter.

¹ This story is derived from the Vinaya, Mahā Vagga, i. 6. 7-9: i. 8. Cf. also Majjhima, 26: i. 170-171; and Therī-Gāthā Commentary, lxviii: 220-222. Text: N iv. 71-72.

XXIV. 10. THE SUMMUM BONUM ¹

The gift of the Law surpasses all gifts. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Sakka king of gods. [73]

For once upon a time the deities assembled in the World of the Thirty-three and raised four questions, as follows: "Which gift is the best of gifts? Which flavor is the best of flavors? Which delight is the best of delights? Why is the destruction of Craving called the thing of all other things supreme?" Not a single deity was able to answer the questions; but one god asked another, and he another, and so on, until each of the deities had asked each of the other deities. For twelve years they went the length and breadth of the ten thousand worlds, but in all this time they were unable to obtain an answer to their questions.

Finally all the deities of the ten thousand worlds met together and went to the Four Great Kings. Said the Four Great Kings, "Friends, why this great gathering together of deities?" Said the deities, "Four questions we have raised, and we are unable to answer them; so we have come to you." "Friends, what are the questions?" "Which is the best of gifts, of flavors, and of delights? Why is the destruction of Craving the thing of all other things supreme?" These are the questions which we are unable to decide, and on account of which we have come to you."

Said the Four Great Kings, "Friends, we do not know the answer to these questions. However, our King has but to ponder questions pondered by a thousand beings, and knows the answer instantly. He is superior to us in wisdom and merit. Come, let us go to him." And taking with them all that great throng of deities, the Four Great Kings went to Sakka king of gods.

Said Sakka king of gods, "Friends, why this great concourse of deities?" They told Sakka the reason for their visit. "Friends," said Sakka, "there is no one who can answer such questions as these except the Buddhas. These matters come within the province of the Buddhas. Where does the Teacher reside now?" "At the Jetavana." "Come, let us go to him."

¹ Cf. Rogers, Buddhaghosha's Parables, xxiv: 160-163; also the last half of the Kevaddha Sutta, Digha, 11: i. 215-223, translated in the Introduction, § 2 c. Text: N iv. 73-76.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Now why is this? For those who do such works of merit as have been mentioned, do them only because they have heard the Law; had they not heard the Law, they would never have done them. For if living beings here in the world were not to hear the Law, they would not give so much as a ladleful of gruel or even a spoonful of boiled rice: for this reason the gift of the Law is superior to these other gifts.

Indeed, leaving out of consideration Buddhas and Private Buddhas, men like Sāriputta and his associates, who possess intellectual power such that they can count all the drops of rain that fall during all the rains that fall in the course of a cycle of time, were unable to attain by themselves unaided the Fruit of Conversion and the other Fruits. But the moment they heard the Law preached by Elder Assaji and others, they realized the Fruit of Conversion; and through the Teacher's preaching of the Law, realized the Perfections of Discipleship. For this reason, great king, the gift of the Law is the best of gifts. Therefore is it said: The gift of the Law surpasses all gifts.

Now all of the flavors, from the flavor of sugar and the like, to flavors of such rare excellence as the flavor of the ambrosial food of the gods, involve those who enjoy them in the round of existences, and are therefore a cause whereby men experience suffering. But this flavor of the Law, comprehending the Thirty-seven Qualities of Intellect which lead to Enlightenment, and the Nine Transcendent Conditions, this is the best of flavors. Therefore it is said: The flavor of the Law surpasses all flavors.

Moreover, as for the various delights, such as delight in sons, delight in daughters, delight in wealth, delight in women, delight in dancing and singing and musical instruments and the like, such delights involve those who take pleasure in them in the round of existences, and are therefore causes whereby men experience suffering. But this delight in the Law, such as springs up within whoever either recites or listens to the Law, [76] producing a state of joy and exaltation, causing tears to flow, causing the hair to stand on end, such a delight as this puts an end to the round of existences, and leads ultimately to Arahatsip; such a delight as this is the best of delights. Therefore it is said: Delight in the Law surpasses all delights.

Finally, as for the destruction of Craving, when Craving has been destroyed, Arahatsip is attained; since the destruction of Craving overcomes the sufferings, one and all, of the round of existences, it is the best of all things. Therefore it is said: The destruction of Craving overcomes all suffering.

When Sakka had heard the Teacher's exposition of the Law, he saluted the Teacher and said, "Reverend Sir, if the gift of the Law is so precious, why do you not cause the merit thereof to be bestowed upon us? Henceforth, when you preach the Law to the Congregation of Monks, cause the merit thereof to be bestowed upon us, Reverend Sir." When the Teacher heard Sakka's request, he gathered together the Congregation of Monks and said to them, "Monks, from this day forth, whenever a festival sermon is preached, or an ordinary sermon, or an informal discourse, or even when words of thanksgiving are recited, you are to bestow the merit thereof upon all beings."

XXIV. 11. TREASURER CHILDLESS ¹

Riches destroy the foolish. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a treasurer named Childless, Aputtaka. [77]

The story goes that when King Pasenadi Kosala heard of his death, he inquired, "To whom falls the property of a man that dies leaving no children?" "The king," was the reply. So during the next seven days the king caused the dead man's property to be removed to the royal palace. When the property had all been removed, the king went to wait upon the Teacher. Said the Teacher to the king, "Ho, great king, whence, pray, do you come at this noon-day hour?" The king replied, "Reverend Sir, here in Sāvatti a householder who was a treasurer died the other day; and as he had no son, I have been superintending the removal of his property to the royal precincts, and am just returning." [All is to be understood as it occurs in the Sutta.]

Said the king, "The story goes that whenever food flavored with all manner of choice flavors was brought to him in a golden dish, he would say, 'So men eat such food as this, do they? Why do you make sport of me in my own house?' If the servants ventured to serve the food, he would attack them with clods of earth and sticks and stones and drive them away. Then he would say, 'This is the proper kind of food for men to eat,' and eat porridge made of rice-dust, followed by sour gruel. Whenever attractive clothes and carriages and parasols were offered him, he would attack his servants with clods of earth and sticks and stones and drive them away. He would wear clothes made of hempen cloth and drive about in an old, broken-down chariot, with a parasol made of leaves held over his head." Then the Teacher related his deed in a previous state of existence:

¹ This story is almost word for word the same as Samyutta, ii. 2. 10: i. 91-92. From the same source is derived the Introduction to Jātaka 390: iii. 299-300. Text: N iv. 76-80.

11 a. Story of the Past: The niggardly treasurer

Great king, in times long past, this treasurer, this householder, provided a Private Buddha named Tagarasikhi with alms. "Give alms to the monk," said he, and rising from his seat, went his way. The story goes that as this unbelieving simpleton spoke these words and went his way, his faithful believing wife thought to herself, "Verily it is a long time since I have heard the word 'Give' fall from the lips of my husband. To-day I will fulfill the wish of my heart and give alms." So taking the bowl of the Private Buddha, and filling it with the choicest food, she presented it to him.

As the treasurer returned, he met the Private Buddha. "Monk, did you get anything?" said he. Taking the bowl, he looked at it and saw the choice food. Straightway he was filled with regret, [78] for, thought he to himself, "It would be better if my slaves and servants had this food to eat. For if they had this food to eat, they would work hard for me. But this monk will take this food and eat it and then lie down and go to sleep. My food has been given away for naught."

Moreover this treasurer deprived of life the only son of his brother, for the sake of the property which his nephew inherited. The story goes that as the nephew walked about, holding the finger of his uncle the treasurer, he would say such things as these, "This carriage is the property of my father, and this ox is his ox." The treasurer thought to himself, "Thus and so he talks, just at the present time. But when he grows to manhood, is anyone likely to see his possessions in this house?" So one day he took his nephew to the forest, seized him by the neck under a certain bush, killed him as one would split open the bulb of a radish, and wringing his neck, cast the dead body into the thicket. This was the evil deed he committed in a previous state of existence. End of Story of the Past.

Therefore it is said: Inasmuch, great king, as this treasurer, this householder, caused the Private Buddha Tagarasikhi to be provided with food, through the ripening of this good deed he attained in seven

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXIV. 12. THE GREATER AND THE LESSER GIFT ¹

Weeds ruin a field. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Yellowstone Rock, Paṇḍukambala Silā, with reference to Añkura. The story is related in detail in the Commentary on the Stanza, “They that devote themselves to meditation and are steadfast;” for it is said there with reference to Indaka:

It is said that on a certain occasion, when the Elder Anuruddha entered the village for alms, Indaka gave him a spoonful of his own food. This was the good deed which he performed in a previous state of existence. Although Añkura had for ten thousand years set up a row of fire-places twelve leagues long and had given abundant alms, Indaka received a greater reward; therefore spoke Indaka thus. When he had thus spoken, the Teacher said, “Añkura, one should use discrimination in giving alms. Under such circumstances alms-giving, like seed sown on good soil, yields abundant fruit. But you have not so done; [81] therefore your gifts have yielded no great fruit.” And to make this matter clear, he said,

Alms should always be given with discrimination.
Alms so given yield abundant fruit.

The giving of alms with discrimination is extolled by the Happy One.
Alms given to living beings here in the world who are worthy of offerings,
Yield abundant fruit, like seeds sown on good ground.

Having thus spoken, he expounded the Law further by pronouncing the following Stanzas,

356. Weeds ruin a field, lust ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from lust yield abundant fruit.

357. Weeds ruin a field, hatred ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from hatred yield abundant fruit.

358. Weeds ruin a field, delusion ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from delusion yield abundant fruit.

359. Weeds ruin a field, inordinate desire ruins mankind.

Therefore alms given to those that are free from inordinate desire yield abundant fruit.

¹ Cf. Story xiv. 2 (text: iii. 219–222). Text: N iv. 80–82.

BOOK XXV. THE MONK, BHIKKHU VAGGA

XXV. 1. GUARD THE DOORS OF THE SENSES ¹

Restraint of the eye is good. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to five monks. [83]

It appears that each of these five monks guarded one of the five doors of the senses. One day they met and began to argue with each other, saying, "It is I who guard the door which is difficult to guard! It is I who guard the door which is difficult to guard!" Finally they said, "We can learn the Truth of this matter by questioning the Teacher." So they approached the Teacher and asked him the following question, "Reverend Sir, each one of us is guarding one of the five doors of the senses, and each one of us imagines that the particular door which he is guarding is the door of all other doors which is the most difficult to guard. Now we should like to have you tell us which one of us is guarding the door that is the most difficult to guard."

The Teacher carefully avoided placing anyone of the monks in a position inferior to that of his fellows and said in reply, "Monks, all of these doors are difficult to guard. But this is not the first time you have failed to control yourselves in these five particulars. In a previous state of existence also you failed to exercise restraint over your senses, and because you failed to exercise restraint over your senses, and because you refused to comply with the admonition of wise men, met destruction." "When was that, Reverend Sir?" asked the five monks.

1 a. Story of the Past: Takkasilā Jātaka

Complying with their request, the Teacher related in detail the Takkasilā Jātaka, [84] telling them how, in the distant past, after the household of a king had been destroyed by ogresses, the Great ¹ The Story of the Past is a brief outline of Jātaka 96: i. 395–401. The title given to this Jātaka in Fausböll's edition is Telapatta: but it is referred to, both at Dh. cm. iv. 83¹⁷ and at Jātaka, i. 470¹, as the Takkasilā Jātaka. Text: N iv. 83–86.

Being, having received the ceremonial sprinkling of a king, seated on the royal throne under the white parasol, surveying his own majesty and glory, thinking to himself, “Men should exert the power of their will,” breathed forth the following Solemn Utterance:

Because with firm courage I abode steadfast in the admonition of good men, because I showed nor fear nor dread,
Therefore came I not into the power of the ogresses. Through great peril came I to safety.

Having recited this Stanza, the Teacher summarized the Jātaka as follows: “At that time you were the five men who, when the Great Being went forth to take the kingdom of Takkasilā, stood round about him with weapons in your hands, guarding the road. But when, as you journeyed by the way, the ogresses tempted you with objects pleasing to the senses of sight and sound and smell and taste and touch, then you threw off all restraint, then you disregarded the admonitions of the Wise Man, then you yielded to the seductions of the ogresses; and they devoured you, and you were utterly destroyed. The Wise Man who restrained himself and yielded not to their temptations, who paid no attention to the ogress of celestial beauty that followed close upon his heels, and who reached Takkasilā in safety and became king, was I myself.”

Having thus summed up the Jātaka, the Teacher said, “A monk should guard all the doors of the senses, for only by guarding the doors of the senses can he obtain release from all suffering.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas, [85]

360. Restraint of the eye is good, restraint of the ear is good,
Restraint of the nose is good, restraint of the tongue is good.
361. Restraint of the body is good, restraint of speech is good,
Restraint of the mind is good, restraint in all things is good.
The monk who practices restraint in all things, obtains release from all suffering.

XXV. 2. THE GOOSE-KILLING MONK ¹

He that controls his hand. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain goose-killing monk. [87]

¹ With the Story of the Present cf. the Introductory Stories to Jātakas 276: ii. 365–366, and 107: i. 418. Dh. cm. iv. 87–88¹⁴ is almost word for word the same as Jātaka, ii. 366¹–367⁶. The Story of the Past is a brief outline of Jātaka 276: ii. 366–381. Text: N iv. 86–90.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

on his return home was appointed to the office of viceroy by his father. On the death of his father he succeeded to the throne. He kept inviolate the Ten Virtues of a King, and likewise practiced the Cardinal Virtues. (The Cardinal Virtues are the Five Precepts, and these the Future Buddha kept whole and undefiled.) And even as the Future Buddha practiced the Cardinal Virtues, so also did his mother, his principal queen, his younger brother the viceroy, the Brahman who was his house-priest, the courtier who was his driver, his charioteer, his treasurer, the minister who was the steward of his granaries, his gate-keeper, and the slave-girl who was his concubine: eleven persons in all.

At the same time Kaliṅga ruled over the kingdom of Kaliṅga in the city of Dantapura, and in his kingdom no rain had fallen for a long time. Now the Great Being had a state-elephant named Añjana-sannibha, an animal of great merit, and the inhabitants of the kingdom of Kaliṅga, thinking that if this elephant were brought to their kingdom, rain would fall, went to their king and so informed him. Thereupon the king sent Brahmans to fetch this elephant. So the Brahmans went and asked the Great Being for the elephant. (The Teacher, in order to make clear the reason for their request, [89] related the Kurudhamma Jātaka, found in the Third Nipāta:)

O king, knowing your faith and virtue,
We spent our money in Kaliṅga for Añjana.

But even after the elephant had been brought to the kingdom of Kaliṅga, no rain fell. The king of Kaliṅga thought to himself, "The king of Kuru practices the Cardinal Virtues, and it is for this reason that rain falls in his kingdom." So Kaliṅga said to his Brahmans and courtiers, "Inscribe on a golden plate the Cardinal Virtues which the king of Kuru practices, and bring the plate to me." So saying, he sent them back to the king of Kuru. So Kaliṅga's courtiers and Brahmans went back and made their request. But from the king down, all the members of the royal household entertained scruples as to whether they had kept the Precepts inviolate, and therefore refused them, saying, "We have not kept the Precepts inviolate." But the Brahmans and courtiers said, "By nothing which you have done, have you violated the Precepts," and asked them again and again. Finally they told them what the Precepts were. When the Brahmans and courtiers returned with the golden plate, and Kaliṅga saw the Cardinal Precepts inscribed thereon, he took upon himself these same Precepts and kept them faithfully. Immediately rain fell in his kingdom, and thereafter the kingdom was prosperous and plentifully supplied with food. End of Story of the Past.

When the Teacher had related this Story of the Past, he identified the persons of the story as follows:

At that time the courtesan was Uppalavaṇṇā, the gate-keeper was Punṇa, the driver was Kaccāna, the steward of the granaries was Kolita, the treasurer was Sāriputta, the charioteer was Anuruddha, the Brahman was Elder Kassapa, the viceroy was the wise Nanda, the principal queen was the Mother of Rāhula, the queen-mother was Māyā Devī, and the king of Kuru was the Future Buddha. Thus understand the Jātaka. [90]

Then said the Teacher, “Monk, thus did wise men of old, although their faults were the merest trifles, scruple concerning their observance of the precepts. But as for you, although you have retired from the world in the Religion of a Buddha like me, you have committed the grievous sin of taking the life of a living creature. A monk ought ever to control his hand and his feet and his tongue.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

362. He that controls his hands, he that controls his feet,
He that controls his tongue, he that controls his head,
He that delights in meditation, he that is well composed,
He that is solitary and contented, such a man is truly called a monk.

XXV. 3. THE MONK WHO FAILED TO HOLD HIS TONGUE ¹

If a monk control his tongue. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Kokālika. The story occurs in the Sutta beginning with the words, “Now the monk Kokālika drew near to where the Exalted One was;” and its meaning is to be understood as explained in the Commentary thereon. [91]

¹ The Jātaka version of the story of Kokālika is contained in the Introduction to Jātaka 481: iv. 242–245. But the author of the Dhammapada Commentary, instead of employing or referring to the Jātaka version, refers the reader to the Kokālika Sutta and to the Commentary thereon; that is to say, either to Samyutta, vi. 1. 10: i. 149–153, or to Sutta Nipāta, iii. 10. The Story of the Past, The Talkative Tortoise, is derived from Jātaka 215: ii. 175–178. Dh. cm. iv. 91^{1a}–92⁸ is identical with Jātaka, ii. 176^{2–18}. The rest of the story is given more briefly. For a discussion of the motif, see Bloomfield, JAOS., 36. 60. Text: N iv. 91–93.

Now after Kokālika had been reborn in the Lotus Hell, the monks in the Hall of Truth began a discussion of the occurrence, saying, “Alas, the monk Kokālika went to perdition because he failed to hold his tongue! For even as he reviled the two Chief Disciples, the earth opened and swallowed him up.” At that moment the Teacher approached and asked, “Monks, what subject are you discussing now as you sit here all gathered together?” When they told him, he said, “Monks, this is not the first time Kokālika has gone to perdition because of failure to hold his tongue; the same thing happened to him in a former state of existence also.” The monks immediately desired to hear all about the matter. In compliance with their requests, to make the matter clear, the Teacher related the following

3 a. Story of the Past: The talkative tortoise

Once upon a time a tortoise dwelt in a certain lake in the Himālaya country. One day two young geese, wandering about in search of food, struck up an acquaintance with him, and in a short time all became firm friends. One day the geese said to the tortoise, “Friend tortoise, we live in the Himālaya country on Mount Cittakūṭa in a golden cave, and it is a most delightful place to live in. Wouldn’t you like to go there with us?” “Masters,” replied the tortoise, “how am I to get there?” Said the geese, “If you can keep your mouth shut, we will carry you.” The tortoise replied, “I will keep my mouth shut, friends. Take me with you, and let’s be off.” “Very well,” said the geese. [92] So the geese made the tortoise grip with his teeth the middle of a stick, and then, taking the two ends of the stick in their bills, flew up into the air.

Some village boys, seeing a tortoise carried along in this fashion by geese, immediately cried out, “See those two geese carrying a tortoise on a stick!” Thought the tortoise, “You beggarly vagabonds, what business is it of yours if my friends are carrying me with them?” And he opened his mouth, intending to say what was in his mind. Now the geese were flying very swiftly, and by this time they had reached a point directly over the royal palace in Benāres city. So when the tortoise let go of the stick, he fell to the ground right in the middle of the palace court, and the moment he struck the ground, split into two pieces.

The tortoise killed himself by lifting up his voice.

Tightly he gripped the stick, and then, by his own talking, killed himself.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies to be summoned before him and asked him, “Is the report true that you have done thus and so?” “Yes, Reverend Sir, it is true.” “Why have you so done?” “This is the thought in my mind, ‘You have announced that four months hence you are to pass into Nibbāna, and I have not yet freed myself from the bondage of desire; therefore while you yet remain alive, I will attain Arahatsip.’ I am considering and pondering and calling to mind the Law which you have preached.” “Good! Good!” exclaimed the Teacher, applauding him. Then said the Teacher to the monks, “Monks, every other monk should show his affection for me just as Dhammārāma has done. For they that honor me with garlands, perfumes, and the like, honor me not; but they that practice the Higher and the Lower Law, they alone truly honor me.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

364. He whose garden of delight is the Law, he that delights in the Law, he that ponders the Law,
 He that meditates upon the Law, that monk will never fall away from the Good
 Law. [95]

At the conclusion of the lesson that monk was established in Arahatsip; the assembled company also profited by the lesson.

XXV. 5. THE TRAITOR MONK¹

Let him not disdain what he has himself received. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to a traitor monk.

This monk, it appears, had as an intimate friend a certain monk who belonged to the faction of Devadatta. One day as he was returning from his breakfast, after accompanying his brother monks on their round for alms, the schismatic monk met him and asked him, “Where have you been?” “To such and such a place on my rounds.” “Did you get any food?” “Yes, I got some.” “Here we receive rich gifts and offerings; stay with us here for a while.” The monk did as his friend suggested, tarried with Devadatta’s monks for several days, and then returned to his own community. [96]

The monks reported his offense to the Tathāgata, saying, “Reverend Sir, this monk has been enjoying the gifts and offerings bestowed upon Devadatta; he is a partisan of Devadatta.” The Teacher caused the monk to be summoned before him and asked him, "Is the report true that you have done thus and so?" "Yes, Reverend Sir, I tarried with Devadatta's monks for a few days on account of a young monk who is a personal friend of mine, but I do not favor Devadatta's views." Said the Exalted One, "Granted that you do not hold erroneous views; yet you rove about as though you held the views of everyone you meet. But this is not the first time you have done such a thing; you did the same thing also in a previous state of existence."

¹ Cf. Jātaka 26: i. 185–188. Text: N iv. 95–97.

Said the monks, "Reverend Sir, we have seen with our own eyes what he did just now; but whose views did he hold in a previous state of existence? Pray tell us all about it." So in response to their request, the Teacher related the following

5 a. Story of the Past: Elephant Damsel-face, Mahilāmukha Jātaka

[After listening to the conversation of thieves and murderers, a well-behaved elephant becomes unruly and kills his keepers. But after listening to the conversation of sages and Brahmans, he becomes well-behaved again. The elephant Damsel-face was the traitor monk.]

After listening to the words of thieves of old,
Damsel-face ranged hither and thither, killing and destroying.
But after listening to the words of men of self-control,
This best of elephants recovered all of his good qualities.

When the Teacher had related this Mahilāmukha Jātaka, he said, "Monks, anyone who is a monk should be contented with just what he has received, and should not covet that which others have received. For if he covet that which others have received, he will attain neither Trance nor Spiritual Insight nor Paths nor Fruits, — not one of these. But if he be content with that alone which he has himself received, [97] all these things will be added unto him." So saying, he expounded the Law, pronouncing the following Stanzas,

365. Let him not disdain what he has himself received, let him not envy others.
For if a monk envy others, he will never attain Concentration.

366. Though a monk receive but little, if he disdain not what he has himself received,
The gods will praise him as of blameless livelihood, unwearied.

XXV. 6. THE BRAHMAN WHO GAVE THE GIFTS OF FIRST-FRUITS ¹

He who has no attachment whatever. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a Brahman who gave the five gifts of first-fruits. [98]

When the grain was ripe, we are told, he gave the first-fruits of the field; when it was threshed, he gave the first-fruits of the threshing-floor; when it was put into the tubs, he gave the first-fruits of the tubs; when it was put into the boiler, he gave the first-fruits of the pot; when it was heaped upon the dish, he gave the first-fruits of the dish. Thus did he give the five gifts of first-fruits, tasting not a morsel himself until he had given to whoever was present. For this reason he came to be called Giver of the Five First-fruits. The Teacher, perceiving that the Brahman and his wife possessed the faculties requisite for the attainment of the Three Fruits, went and stood at the door of the Brahman's house at meal-time. The Brahman sat eating in front of the door, facing the interior of the house, and therefore did not see the Teacher as he stood at the door.

But the Brahman's wife, as she served her husband with food, saw the Teacher and thought to herself, "This Brahman, after giving the Five Gifts of First-fruits, is eating his meal, and now comes the monk Gotama and stands at his door. If the Brahman sees him, he will take his own food and give it to him, and I shall not be able to cook any more for him." So turning her back on the Teacher, she stood behind her husband, stooping over so as to conceal the Teacher from the view of her husband, as if thinking to cover the full moon with her hand. Thus did she stand, watching the Teacher with half an eye and saying to herself, "Has he gone or not?" The Teacher remained standing where he was. The Brahman's wife refrained from saying, "Pass on," for fear that her husband would hear. After a while, however, she stepped back and said in a very low tone of voice, "Pass on." "I will not go," thought the Teacher and shook his head. [99] When the Buddha, the Teacher of the World, thinking, "I will not go," shook his head, the Brahman's wife was not able to contain herself, and broke out into a loud laugh.

At that moment the Teacher sent forth a radiant image of himself

¹ This story is given in Sutta-Nipāta Commentary on i. 12. 11: p. 271. Text: N iv. 98-101.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXV. 7. THE CONVERSION OF A PACK OF THIEVES ¹

That monk who abides in loving-kindness. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a numerous company of monks. [101]

For once upon a time, while Venerable Kaccāna the Great was in residence in the Avanti country on a mountain near the city of Kurāghara, a lay disciple named Soṇa Kūṭikaṇṇa, convinced of the truth of the Law by the preaching of the Elder, expressed a desire to retire from the world and become a monk under the Elder. Said the Elder, “Soṇa, it is a difficult matter to eat alone and lodge alone and live a life of chastity,” and twice turned him away.

But Soṇa was determined to become a monk, and on asking the Elder the third time, succeeded in obtaining admission to the Order. On account of the scarcity of monks in the South, he spent three years in that country, and then made his full profession as a member of the Order. Desiring to see the Teacher face to face, he asked leave of his preceptor, and taking a message from him, set out for Jetavana. On reaching Jetavana, he saluted the Teacher, who greeted him in a friendly manner and permitted him to lodge in the Perfumed Chamber alone with himself.

Soṇa spent the greater part of the night in the open air, and then, entering the Perfumed Chamber, spent the rest of the night on the couch assigned to him for his own use. When the dawn came, he intoned by command of the Teacher all of the Sixteen Octads. [102] When he had completed his recitation of the text, the Teacher thanked him and applauded him, saying, “Well done, well done, monk!” Hearing the applause bestowed upon him by the Teacher, the deities, beginning with deities of earth, Nāgas and the Supaṇṇas, and extending to the World of Brahmā, gave one shout of applause.

At that moment also the deity resident in the house of the eminent female lay disciple who was the mother of the Elder Soṇa in Kurāghara city, at a distance of a hundred and twenty leagues from the Jetavana, gave a loud shout of applause. The female lay disciple said to the deity, “Who is this that gives applause?” The deity replied, “It is I, sister.” “Who are you?” “I am the deity resident in your house.” “You have never before bestowed applause upon me; why do you do so to-day?” “I am not bestowing applause upon you.” “Then upon whom are you bestowing applause?” “Upon your son Elder Kūṭikaṇṇa Soṇa.” “What has my son done?”

¹ Cf. Vinaya, Mahā Vagga, v. 13. 1–10: i. 194–197; Udāna, v. 6: 57–59; and Thera-Gāthā Commentary, ccviii. See also Commentary on Udāna, v. 6, and on the Etadagga Vagga of the Aṅguttara: Story of Kāṭiyāni. At Jātaka, vi. 15, the Commentator refers to this story. Text: N iv. 101–112.

“To-day, your son, residing alone with the Teacher in the Perfumed Chamber, recited the Law to the Teacher. The Teacher, pleased with your son’s recitation of the Law, bestowed applause upon him; therefore I also bestowed applause upon him. For when the deities heard the applause bestowed upon your son by the Supreme Buddha, all of them, from deities of earth to the World of Brahmā, gave one shout of applause.” “Master, do you really mean that my son recited the Law to the Teacher? Did not the Teacher recite the Law to my son?” “It was your son who recited the Law to the Teacher.”

As the deity thus spoke, the five kinds of joy sprang up within the disciple, suffusing her whole body. Then the following thought occurred to her, “If my son has been able, residing alone with the Teacher in the Perfumed Chamber, to recite the Law to him, [103] he will be able to recite the Law to me also. When my son returns, I will arrange for a hearing of the Law and will listen to his preaching of the Law.”

When the Teacher bestowed applause upon Elder Soṇa, the Elder thought to himself, “Now is the time for me to announce the message which my preceptor gave me.” Accordingly Elder Soṇa asked the Teacher for five boons, asking first for full admission to the Order of the community of five monks in the borderlands, of whom one was a monk versed in the Vinaya. For a few days longer he resided with the Teacher, and then, thinking to himself, “I will now go see my preceptor,” took leave of the Teacher, departed from the Jetavana, and in due course arrived at the abode of his preceptor.

On the following day Elder Kaccāna took Elder Soṇa with him and set out on his round for alms, going to the door of the house of the female lay disciple who was the mother of Soṇa. When the mother of Soṇa saw her son, her heart was filled with joy. She showed him every attention and asked him, “Dear son, is the report true that you resided alone with the Teacher in the Perfumed Chamber, and that you recited the Law to the Teacher?” “Lay disciple, who told you that?” “Dear son, the deity who resides in this house gave a loud shout of applause, and when I asked, ‘Who is this that gives applause?’ the deity replied, ‘It is I,’ and told me thus and so.

“After I had listened to what he had to say, the following thought occurred to me, 'If my son has recited the Law to the Teacher, he will be able to recite the Law to me also.' Dear son, since you have recited the Law to the Teacher, you will be able to recite it to me also. Therefore on such and such a day I will arrange for a hearing of the Law, and will listen to your preaching of the Law." He consented. The female lay disciple gave alms to the company of monks and rendered honor to them. Then she said to herself, "I will hear my son preach the Law." And leaving but a single female slave behind to guard the house, [104] she took all of her attendants with her and went to hear the Law. Within the city, in a pavilion erected for the hearing of the Law, her son ascended the gloriously adorned Seat of the Law and began to preach the Law.

Now at this time nine hundred thieves were prowling about, trying to find some way of getting into the house of this female lay disciple. Now as a precaution against thieves, her house was surrounded with seven walls, provided with seven battlemented gates, and at frequent intervals about the circuit of the walls were savage dogs in leash. Moreover within, where the water dripped from the house-roof, a trench had been dug and filled with lead. In the day-time this mass of lead melted in the rays of the sun and became viscous, and in the night-time the surface became stiff and hard. Close to the trench, great iron pickets had been sunk in the ground in unbroken succession. Such were the precautionary measures against thieves taken by this female lay disciple.

By reason of the defenses without the house and the presence of the lay disciple within, those thieves had been unable to find any way of getting in. But on that particular day, observing that she had left the house, they dug a tunnel under the leaden trench and the iron pickets, and thus succeeded in getting into the house. Having effected an entrance into the house, they sent the ringleader to watch the mistress of the house, saying to him, "If she hears that we have entered the house, and turns and sets out in the direction of the house, strike her with your sword and kill her."

The ringleader went and stood beside her. The thieves, once within the house, lighted a light and opened the door of the room where the copper coins were kept. The female slave saw the thieves, went to the female lay disciple her mistress, and told her, "My lady, many thieves have entered your house and have opened the door of the room where the copper coins are kept." The female lay disciple replied, "Let the thieves take all the copper coins they see. I am

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

lay disciple. Then said the thieves to the female lay disciple, “My lady, if you pardon us, obtain for us the privilege of entering the Order under your son.”

The female lay disciple saluted her son and said, “Dear son, these thieves are so pleased with my good qualities and with your recitation of the Law, that they desire to be admitted to the Order; admit them to the Order.” “Very well,” replied the Elder. So he caused the skirts of the undergarments they wore to be cut off, had their garments dyed with red clay, admitted them to the Order, and established them in the Precepts. When they had made their full profession as members of the Order, he gave to each one of them a separate Subject of Meditation. Then those nine hundred monks took the nine hundred Subjects of Meditation which they had severally received, climbed a certain mountain, and sitting each under the shadow of a separate tree, applied themselves to meditation.

The Teacher, even as he sat in the Great Monastery at Jetavana, a hundred and twenty leagues away, scrutinized those monks, chose a form of instruction suited to their dispositions, sent forth a radiant image of himself, and as though sitting face to face with them and talking to them, pronounced the following Stanzas,

368. That monk who abides in loving-kindness, and who has faith in the Religion of the Buddha,

Will reach the Place of Peace, Cessation of Existence, Happiness.

369. Monk, bale out this boat, for if it be baled out, light will it go for you.

Destroy both lust and hatred; then to Nibbāna will you go.

370. Cut off Five, renounce Five, develop Five more.

The monk who has escaped from the Five Fetters is called “one who has crossed the flood.” [107]

371. Meditate, O monk, and be not heedless; permit not the pleasures of sense to sway your heart,

Lest as a punishment for your heedlessness, you swallow the iron ball, lest you cry as you burn, “This is pain.”

372. Meditation is impossible for him who lacks wisdom; wisdom is impossible for him who meditates not;

He that both meditates and possesses wisdom is near Nibbāna.

373. The monk who with tranquil heart enters an empty house,

Experiences an unearthly delight through his right discernment of the Law.

374. So soon as one grasps the thought of the rise and set of the Aggregates of Being,

One obtains the happiness and joy of those who comprehend the Deathless.

375. This is the proper way for a wise monk to begin in this world:
Guarding of the senses, contentment, restraint under the Precepts;
Cultivate virtuous friends, whose lives are pure, who faint not by the way.
376. One should be cordial in manner, one should be upright in conduct;
So will one experience profound joy and make an end of suffering.

XXV. 8. "THE GRASS WITHERETH, THE FLOWER FADETH"¹

Even as the jasmine. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to five hundred monks. [112]

The story goes that these monks obtained a Subject of Meditation from the Teacher, retired to the forest, and applied themselves to meditation. While thus engaged, they saw jasmine flowers which had blossomed that very morning, dropping in the evening from the stem. Thereupon they thought to themselves, "We will obtain release from lust, hatred, and delusion, before you obtain release from your stems," and applied themselves to meditation with renewed vigor. The Teacher beheld those monks and said, "Monks, even as a flower is released from its stem, even so should a monk strive to obtain release from the pain of birth and rebirth." And even as he sat within the Perfumed Chamber, he sent forth a light and pronounced the following Stanza,

377. Even as the jasmine sheds its withered flowers,
Even so, monks, should one shed lust and hatred. [113]

At the conclusion of the lesson, all those monks were established in Arahatsip.

XXV. 9. THE MONK WHOSE MOTHER WAS A LIONESS²

The monk who is tranquil in action. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Santakāya.

It is said of this monk that he was never guilty of any improper movement of hand or foot. He never yawned or stretched out his arms and legs, but always carried himself with composure and dignity. The story goes that this Elder issued from the womb of a lioness. It is said of lionesses that if on any day they find prey, they enter one or another of the caves of silver, gold, jewels, and coral, and lie for the space of seven days on beds composed of the powder of red arsenic and yellow orpiment. On the seventh day they arise and survey the beds where they have lain, and if they notice that by reason of the movement of their tails or ears or forefeet or hindfeet, the powder of red arsenic and yellow orpiment has been scattered about, they say to themselves, “This does not become your birth or lineage,” and lie down again and fast for seven days more. Then, provided the powder has not been scattered about, they say to themselves, [114] “This becomes your birth and lineage,” come forth from their lairs, yawn and stretch themselves, take a view of the cardinal points, roar the lion’s roar three times, and go forth in search of prey. From the womb of such a lioness as this did this monk issue forth.

¹ Cf. Story xx. 9. Text: N iv. 112-113.

² Text: N iv. 113-114.

The composure and dignity of this monk attracted the attention of the other monks, and they said to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, we have never seen such a monk as Elder Santakāya: for when he assumes a sitting posture, he never moves his hands; he never moves his feet; he never yawns, or stretches out his arms and legs.” When the Teacher heard this, he said, “Monks, he that is a monk should be, like Elder Santakāya, composed in action, speech, and thought.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

378. The monk who is tranquil in action, tranquil in speech, tranquil in thought, collected,

Who has rejected the allurements of the world, he is truly called “composed.”

XXV. 10. THE MONK AND THE RAGGED GARMENT¹

Admonish thyself by thyself. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Naṅgalakula. [115]

The story goes that there was a certain poor man who made his living by working for other people. One day a monk saw him going along, clad only in a ragged loin-cloth, with his plow on his shoulder.

¹ Cf. Story x. 10. Text: N iv. 115–117.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

379. Admonish thyself by thyself; examine thyself by thyself;
Guard thyself; be mindful: do this, O monk! and thou shalt live in happiness.
380. For self is the lord of self, self is the refuge of self:
Therefore curb thyself, as a merchant curbs a goodly steed.

XXV. 11. “WHOSOEVER BEHOLDS THE LAW, HE BEHOLDS ME”¹

Full of joy. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Elder Vakkali. [118]

This Venerable Elder, we are told, was reborn at Sāvattthi in the household of a Brahman. One day after he had reached manhood he saw the Tathāgata enter the city for alms. Having surveyed the Teacher's beauty of person, not satisfied with the sight of the beauty of his person, he said to himself, “I will obtain the privilege of looking thus at all times upon the Tathāgata.” He therefore retired from the world and became a monk under the Teacher. He always stood where he could see the Possessor of the Ten Forces, and abandoning the recitation of the Sacred Word and the Practice of Meditation, he spent his whole time gazing upon the Teacher. The Teacher waited for his knowledge to ripen and said not a word. One day the Teacher perceived within himself, “Now his knowledge has ripened;” so he said to him, “Vakkali, what shall it profit you to look upon this mass of corruption which is called my body? Whosoever, Vakkali, beholds the Law, he beholds me.” Thus did the Teacher admonish Elder Vakkali.

But in spite of the Teacher's admonition, Vakkali could not let the Teacher get out of his sight or leave the Teacher's presence. Finally the Teacher thought to himself, “Unless this monk receives a shock, he will never come to understand.” Now the season of the rains was at hand, and the Teacher desired to enter upon residence. So on the day appointed to enter upon residence, the Teacher went to Rājagaha, turning Vakkali away with the words, “Go back, Vakkali.” So for the space of three months Vakkali was unable to be with the Teacher and kept saying to himself, “The Teacher speaks to me no more.” Finally he said to himself, “What is the use of my living any longer? I will throw myself headlong from the top of a mountain.” And with this thought in mind, he climbed to the top of Mount Vulture Peak.

¹ This story is derived from Saṃyutta, xxii. 87: iii. 119–124. For other versions in the Commentaries, see Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Vakkali; and Thera-Gāthā Commentary, ccv. The author of the Thera-Gāthā Commentary names the Aṅguttara Commentary and the Dhammapada Commentary as his authorities. Cf. also Itivuttaka, v. 3: pp. 90–92. Text: N iv. 117–119.

The Teacher, perceiving that he was depressed and weary of the world, thought to himself, “If this monk receives no comfort nor consolation from me, he will destroy his predispositions to the attainment of the Paths and the Fruits.” Accordingly he sent forth a radiant image of himself and displayed himself before the gaze of the monk. The moment the monk saw the Teacher, the weight of sorrow which oppressed him vanished. Then the Teacher, as though filling the dry bed of a lake with a torrent of water, caused intense joy and satisfaction to spring up within the monk, and pronounced the following Stanza, [119]

381. Full of joy and satisfaction, the monk who has perfect faith in the Religion of the Buddha

Will reach the Place of Peace, Cessation of Existence, Happiness.

Having pronounced this Stanza, the Teacher stretched forth his hand to Elder Vakkali and said,

Come, Vakkali! fear not, as you look upon the Tathāgata.
I will lift you up, even as one extricates an elephant that has sunk in the mire.

Come, Vakkali! fear not, as you look upon the Tathāgata.
I will release you, even as one releases the sun from the maw of Rāhu.

Come, Vakkali! fear not, as you look upon the Tathāgata.
I will release you, even as one releases the moon from the maw of Rāhu.

Elder Vakkali thought, “I have seen the Possessor of the Ten Forces, and he speaks to me, saying, ‘Come!’” Straightway he experienced profound joy. “How pray shall I go?” thought he. And standing there on the mountain-top, though he saw no path, he sprang into the air face to face with the Possessor of the Ten Forces, on hearing the first words of the Stanza. And as he soared through the air, pondering the Stanzas pronounced by the Teacher, he completely suppressed the emotion of joy and attained Arahatsip together with the Supernatural Powers. And praising the Tathāgata, he descended to the ground and stood in the presence of the Teacher. On a subsequent occasion the Teacher assigned him the foremost place among those who possess the propensity for faith.

XXV. 12. THE NOVICE AND THE DRAGON¹

That monk who while still young. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Pubbārāma with reference to the novice Sumana. The story from beginning to end is as follows: [120]

12 a. Story of the Past: The poor man Annabhāra and the rich man Sumana

In the dispensation of the Buddha Padumuttara a certain youth saw the Teacher in the midst of the Fourfold Assembly assign to a certain monk the place of Foremost of those who possess Supernatural Vision. Desiring the same Attainment for himself, he invited the Teacher to be his guest, gave alms for seven days to the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, and made the following Earnest Wish: “Reverend Sir, may I also in time to come, under the dispensation of some Buddha, become Foremost of those who possess Supernatural Vision.” The Teacher surveyed a hundred thousand cycles of time, and seeing that his Earnest Wish would be fulfilled, made the following prophecy: “A hundred thousand cycles of time from now, under the dispensation of the Buddha Gotama, this youth will be Foremost of those who possess Supernatural Vision, and his name will be Anuruddha.”

After the youth had heard this prophecy, it seemed to him every day as if he were about to reach this Attainment on the next. When the Teacher passed into Nibbāna, he asked the monks to tell him the procedure preliminary to the attainment of Supernatural Vision. Causing many thousand torches to be set up in a circle about the golden shrine of the Teacher, seven leagues in extent, he honored him with the Offering of Light. Passing from that state of existence, he was reborn in the World of the Gods, and after passing from one state of existence to another during a hundred thousand cycles of time, he was reborn in this age of the world at Benāres in the household of a poor man. He made his living as a grass-carrier for Treasurer Sumana, and his name was Food-bearer, Annabhāra. Treasurer Sumana constantly gave large gifts in this city.

¹ Parallels: Rogers, Buddhaghosha's Parables, xiii: 107–119; Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, pp. 234–242; Thera-Gāthā Commentary, ccxix. With xxv. 12 b cf. i. 12 a. Text: N iv. 120–137.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

and asked him, "Did you give alms to anybody to-day?" "Yes, master, I gave my portion of boiled rice to the Private Buddha Upariṭṭha to-day." "Here, take this penny and give me this portion of alms." "I will not give it, master." The treasurer gradually increased his offer to a thousand pieces of money, but Annabhāra refused to give his portion of alms. Then said the treasurer, "Very well, sir, if you will not give me the portion of alms, take a thousand pieces of money and make over to me the merit of your gift." Annabhāra replied, "I will consult with his reverence, and then make up my mind what to do." So he went quickly to the Private Buddha and asked him, "Reverend Sir, the Treasurer Sumana has offered me a thousand pieces of money, asking me to make over to him the merit I acquired by giving you a portion of alms. What shall I do?"

The Private Buddha answered by a simile: "Wise man, it is as if in a village consisting of a hundred families, a man were to light a lamp in a single house and the rest of the villagers were to moisten their wicks with their own oil, light their lamps, and take them away with them. [123] Is that light the light of the first lamp or not?" "Reverend Sir, in that case the light of the first lamp has multiplied itself." "Wise man, precisely so is it with the alms you gave. Whether it be a ladleful of broth, or a spoonful of boiled rice, when a man makes over to others the merit of a portion of alms which he has given, the merit thereof increases according to the number of persons to whom he gives. To be sure, you have given but a single portion of alms. But in making over the merit thereof to the treasurer, that one portion of alms has become two, of which one belongs to you and the other to him."

"Very well, Reverend Sir," said Annabhāra. And taking leave of the Private Buddha, he went to the treasurer and said, "Master, receive the merit of the portion of alms which I gave." "Well then, take these pieces of money." "I will not sell the portion of alms I gave. I give you the merit thereof as an Act of Faith." "Then give it to me as an Act of Faith. For my part, I honor your noble qualities. Friend, take this money. But from this very day, work no more for me with your own hands. Build a house for yourself in the principal street of the city and take up your residence therein. Whatever you may require for your purposes, take all from my store." Such was the immediate fruit of a portion of alms given to one who had arisen from a Trance of Cessation. Therefore the king also, hearing of the incident, caused Annabhāra to be summoned before him, obtained from him a share of the merit, gave him great wealth, and gave him the post of treasurer.

Thus did Annabhāra become a friend of Treasurer Sumana. After performing works of merit to the end of his life, he passed from that state of existence and was reborn in the World of the Gods. After passing from one state of existence to another in the Worlds of the Gods and the world of men, [124] he obtained a new conception in the dispensation of the present Buddha in the city of Kapilavatthu in the household of Amitodana the Sakyan. At the end of ten lunar months his mother gave him birth. He was named Anuruddha. He was the youngest brother of Mahānāma, son of the Teacher's uncle. He was very delicately nurtured and was the possessor of a vast store of merit.

12 b. Story of the Present: Anuruddha retires from the world

The story goes that one day six Khattiyas engaged in a game of marbles, staking cakes on the result. Anuruddha lost and sent to his mother for cakes. His mother filled a large golden dish with cakes and sent them to him. The six Khattiyas ate the cakes and resumed their play. Anuruddha lost again and sent to his mother for some more cakes. Three times in all, his mother sent him cakes. The fourth time she sent back word, "There isn't cake to send." When Anuruddha received her message, having never before heard the word isn't, he imagined to himself, "These must be isn't cakes." So he sent the man back, saying to him, "Go fetch some isn't cakes." When his mother received the message, "My lady, send me some isn't cakes," she thought to herself, "My son has never heard the word isn't. How can I teach him what isn't means?" So she washed a golden bowl, covered it with another golden bowl, and sent it to her son, saying to the bearer, "Here, friend, give this to my son."

At that moment the guardian deities of the city thought, "In our master's previous existence as Annabhāra he gave food that was his own portion to the Private Buddha Upaṇṇāsa, [125] making the Earnest Wish, 'May I never hear the word isn't.' If we, knowing all this as we do, should look on complacently, it may even happen that our heads will split into seven pieces." So they filled the dish with celestial cakes. The man carried the dish back, set it down before the six Khattiyas, and uncovered it. The fragrance of the cakes permeated the entire city. Moreover, the moment a morsel of this cake was placed in the mouth, it thrilled the seven thousand nerves of taste.

Anuruddha thought, "Doubtless my mother never loved me before, for never at any other time has she fried isn't cakes for me." So he went to his mother and said to her, "Dear mother, do you not love me?" "Dear son, what are you saying? You are dearer to me than my very eyes, dearer to me than my heart's flesh." "Dear mother, if you really love me, why have you never before given me such cakes as these isn't cakes?" Anuruddha's mother asked the man, "Friend, was there anything in the dish?" "Yes, my lady, the dish was filled with cakes the like of which I never saw before." Anuruddha's mother thought, "My son has wrought works of merit, and deities must therefore have sent him celestial cakes." Anuruddha said to his mother, "Dear mother, I never ate such cakes as these before. From this time forth fry isn't cake alone for me." So from that time forth, whenever Anuruddha said, "I should like some cakes to eat," his mother would wash a golden bowl, [126] cover it with another bowl, and send it to him, and the deities would fill the dish with celestial cakes. Thus during all the time Anuruddha lived amid the cares of the household life, he never knew the meaning of the word isn't and lived altogether on celestial cakes.

Now when one after another the sons of families belonging to the Sakya clan had retired from the world to form the Teacher's retinue, Mahānāma the Sakyan said to his younger brother Anuruddha, "Dear brother, no member of our family has yet retired from the world and become a monk. Either you or I ought to retire from the world and become a monk." Anuruddha replied, "I have been delicately nurtured; I shall never be able to retire from the world and live the life of a monk." "Well then, you take up farming, and I will become a monk." "What is this farming?" For Anuruddha did not even know where food comes from; how therefore could he be expected to know the meaning of farming? Therefore did he speak thus.

For one day the three princes Anuruddha, Bhaddiya, and Kimbila engaged in a discussion of the question, "Where does food come from?" Kimbila said, "It comes from the granary." (It seems that one day Kimbila saw rice being put into a granary. So he imagined, "Food comes from the granary," and said so.) Bhaddiya said to Kimbila, "You know nothing about it; food comes from the boiler." (It seems that one day Bhaddiya saw food being taken out of the boiler. So he imagined, "Food comes from the boiler," and said so.) Anuruddha

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

a mountain, there is a market-town named Muṇḍa; and there lives a lay disciple named Mahā Muṇḍa, and he has two sons, Mahā Sumana and Culla Sumana. Treasurer Sumana has been reborn as Culla Sumana.” Having seen him, he thought to himself, “Is there any use in my going there or not?” Considering the matter, he saw the following, “So soon as I go there, although he is but seven years old, he will come forth from the world and become a monk, and will attain Arahatsip at the razor’s edge.” Having seen all this, since the season of the rains was at hand, he proceeded through the air and alighted at the gate of the village.

12 c. Story of the Present: The novice Sumana and the dragon

Now the lay disciple Mahā Muṇḍa had been an intimate friend of the Elder in a previous state of existence also. So when it was time to go the rounds for alms, seeing the Elder putting on his robe, he said to his son Mahā Sumana, “Dear son, my noble master the Elder Anuruddha has arrived. So long as no one else takes his bowl, you go take his bowl, and I will provide a seat for him.” Mahā Sumana did so. The lay disciple showed the Elder every attention in his house, and obtained his promise to reside there during the three months of the rains, the Elder graciously consenting. The lay disciple cared for the Elder during the three months of the rains as faithfully as though he were caring for him for but a single day. [129]

At the festival of Mahā Pavāraṇā he brought treacle, oil, rice, and the like, placed them at the Elder’s feet, and said to him, “Accept these, Reverend Sir.” “Enough, lay disciple, I have no use for these.” “Reverend Sir, this is the usual offering bestowed upon those who have kept residence; pray accept it.” “Enough, lay disciple.” “Why will you not accept it, Reverend Sir?” “I have no novice to attend me.” “Well then, Reverend Sir, my son Mahā Sumana will be your novice.” “Lay disciple, I have no use for Mahā Sumana.” “Well then, Reverend Sir, admit Culla Sumana to the Order.” “Very well,” replied the Elder, consenting, and admitted Culla Sumana to the Order. Culla Sumana attained Arahatsip at the razor’s edge. The Elder tarried there with him for a fortnight and then, saying to himself, “I will go see the Teacher,” took leave of his kinsfolk, proceeded through the air to the Himālaya country, and descended to the ground at Araññakuṭikā.

Now the Elder was ordinarily energetic and active, and as he walked back and forth during the former and the latter part of the night, he began to suffer with indigestion. The novice noticed that he looked haggard and pale and asked him, "Reverend Sir, what ails you?" "I am troubled with indigestion." "Have you ever before been troubled with it, Reverend Sir?" "Yes, brother." "What will cure you, Reverend Sir?" "Brother, drinking-water brought from Lake Anotatta will cure me." "Well then, Reverend Sir, I will fetch you some." "Can you do so, novice?" "Yes, Reverend Sir." "Well then, Pannaka, king of the dragons, who lives at Lake Anotatta, knows me; tell him your errand, and fetch me a jar of drinking-water for medicinal purposes." "Very well," replied the novice, and saluting his preceptor, he rose into the air and proceeded to Lake Anotatta, five hundred leagues away. [130]

Now on that day the king of the dragons had laid his plans to disport himself in the water in company with some dancing dragons. When therefore he saw the novice approaching, he became very angry. Said he to himself, "Here this shaveling novice walks about, scattering the dust of his own feet on the top of my head! He must have come to fetch drinking-water from Lake Anotatta. Well, I will not let him have any drinking-water!" And forthwith he lay down, covering with his hood the whole of Lake Anotatta, fifty leagues in extent, just as one would cover a kettle with a great dish. The novice observed the manner of the king of the dragons, and perceiving within himself, "He is angry," pronounced the following Stanza,

Hear me, king of dragons, possessed of terrible heat and mighty strength;
Give me a jar of water; I have come for medicine.

Hearing this, the king of the dragons pronounced the following Stanza,

In the Eastern quarter a mighty river known as the Ganges Empties into the Great Ocean. Fetch water thence.

When the novice heard this, he thought to himself, "This dragon will not give me water of his own free will. I will therefore employ violence, display great supernatural power, overpower him, and take the water." [131] So the novice said to the king of the dragons, "Mighty king, my preceptor directed me to fetch drinking-water from Lake Anotatta and nowhere else. Therefore I will fetch only this water. Depart from me; do not seek to hinder me." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

Hence only will I fetch drinking-water; this alone do I seek.
If you possess power and strength, king of dragons, restrain yourself.

Said the king of the dragons to the novice,

Novice, if you possess strength and manhood
(I applaud your words), — take my drinking-water with you.

Then said the novice to the king of the dragons, “Thus, mighty king, will I take the water.” Said the king of the dragons, “Take it if you can.” “Very well,” said the novice, “make up your mind for certain.” Three times did the novice exact a promise from the king of the dragons. Then he thought to himself, “I had best manifest the power of the Religion of the Buddha in taking this water.” So he went to the deities who dwell in the sky. They approached, saluted him, and said, “What do you wish, Reverend Sir?” “There is going to be a battle between me and Paṇṇaka king of the dragons, who broods over the surface of Lake Anotatta; go there and see who wins and who loses.”

In like manner the novice went to the Four Warders of the World, and to Sakka, Suyāma, Santusita, Paranimmita-Vasavattī, and told them what was about to happen. Then he went farther to each one of the Brahmā Worlds, nine in number. The Brahmā of each of these worlds [132] approached, saluted him, and asked, “What do you wish, Reverend Sir?” The novice told each of them what was about to happen. Thus the novice passed through each of the worlds in but an instant of time, visiting all of the deities except the Unconscious Deities and the Formless Brahmās, and told the deities what was about to happen. Hearing his words, all of the deities assembled on the surface of Lake Anotatta, filling the sky completely, as when powdered lead is put into a pint-measure. When the host of deities had assembled, the novice, poised in the air, spoke thus to the king of the dragons,

Hear me, king of dragons, possessed of terrible heat and mighty strength;
Give me a jar of water; I have come for medicine.

The king of the dragons replied,

Novice, if you possess strength and manhood
(I applaud your words), — take my drinking-water with you.

Having thrice exacted a promise from the king of the dragons, the novice, poised in the air, assumed the form of Brahmā, twelve leagues in height, and descending from the sky, trod upon the hood of the

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

The Elder took the novice with him and set out on his round. The Teacher, knowing that the Elder was on his way, sat in the mansion of the Mother of Migāra, waiting for the Elder to come. When the monks saw the Elder approaching, they came forth to meet him and took his bowl and robe. Some of them patted the novice on the head and tweaked his ears, saying, "Little novice, are you not discontented?" When the Teacher saw what they were doing, he thought to himself, "These monks are doing a very wrong thing in taking liberties with this novice. They are taking hold of this novice as one would take a poisonous snake by the neck. They do not know how great is the supernatural power which he possesses. I ought this very day to make known the virtues of the novice Sumana." The Elder approached, saluted the Teacher, and sat down. The Teacher exchanged friendly greetings with the Elder, and addressed the Elder Ānanda as follows, "Ānanda, I desire to bathe my feet in water from Lake Anotatta. Give water-pots to the novices and bid them fetch water." [135]

The Elder Ānanda assembled five hundred novices within the monastery, of whom the novice Sumana was the youngest of all. Said the Elder to the oldest novice of all, "Novice, the Teacher desires to bathe his feet in water from Lake Anotatta. Take a water-pot, go to Lake Anotatta, and fetch water from thence." "I cannot do it, Reverend Sir," replied the oldest novice, declining to go. The Elder then asked each of the remaining novices in turn, and they likewise refused. But were there no novices who had attained Arahatship? Of course there were, but they refused to go because they knew, "This basket of flowers was not made for us; it was made solely for the novice Sumana." Those who had not yet attained the Fruit of Conversion refused because they knew that they were unequal to the task.

Finally the novice Sumana's turn came. Said the Elder Ānanda, "Novice, the Teacher desires to bathe his feet in water from Lake Anotatta, and requests that you take a water-pot and fetch him water." "If the Teacher desires me to fetch him water, I will fetch it," replied the novice. And saluting the Teacher, he said, "Reverend Sir, I am informed that you desire me to fetch water from Lake Anotatta." "Yes, Sumana." Thereupon the novice selected from among the monastery vessels of solid beaten gold which had been made by command of Visākhā, a great hogshead with a capacity of sixty water-pots of water. Said he to himself, "There is no need of my raising this and placing it on my shoulder." So taking it in his hand and letting it hang down, he soared into the air and struck out in the direction of the Himālaya country.

While the novice was yet a long way off, the king of the dragons saw him approaching, and advancing to meet him, [136] took the hogshead, placed it on his shoulder, and said to the novice, "Reverend Sir, so long as you have a slave like me in the land of the living, why did you come in person? If you needed water, why did you not just send a message?" And filling the hogshead with water, he lifted it up himself and said to the novice, "You go ahead, Reverend Sir; I myself will carry the water." "Remain where you are, great king," replied the novice; "I have received a command from the Supreme Buddha." So saying, he caused the king of the dragons to turn back; and grasping the hogshead with his hand by the rim, he soared away into the air.

The Teacher saw him approaching and addressed the monks as follows, "Monks, behold the grace of the novice! He soars through the air with grace equal to that of a royal swan." The novice set down the hogshead of water and saluted the Teacher. Said the Teacher to the novice, "How old are you, Sumana?" "I am seven years old, Reverend Sir." "Well then, Sumana, from this day forth be a monk." So saying, the Teacher bestowed on him the inheritance of admission to full membership in the Order. It is said that but two novices ever received admission to full membership in the Order at the age of seven years: this novice Sumana and the novice Sopāka.

When this novice Sumana had thus received admission to full membership in the Order, the monks began the following discussion in the Hall of Truth, "How wonderful it is, brethren! How great is the supernatural power of this novice! We have never seen supernatural power so marvelous before!" At that moment the Teacher drew near and asked the monks, "Monks, what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?" When they told him, he said, "Monks, such is the Attainment that even a young monk wins in my Religion, if he walk in righteousness." [137] So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

382. That monk who while still young devotes himself to the Religion of the Buddha,
Such a monk illumines the world as does the moon freed from a cloud.

XXVI. 1. BRAHMAN GREAT-JOY¹

Cleave the stream. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Brahman Great-Joy, Pasādabahula. [138]

The story goes that this Brahman once heard the Exalted One preach the Law, and was so delighted at heart that he thereafter gave food regularly to sixteen monks at his house. When the monks came, he would take their bowls and say, “May the Reverend Arahats draw near! May the Reverend Arahats sit down!” No matter whom he addressed, he greeted all of the monks with the title “Arahats.” Now those of the monks who had not yet attained the Fruit of Conversion thought to themselves, “This layman thinks that there are Arahats among us;” and those who had attained Arahatship thought to themselves, “This layman does not know that we have attained Arahatship.” The result was that all of the monks became dissatisfied and stopped going to his house.

This made the layman very sad and sorrowful. “Why pray do the noble monks no longer come to my house?” thought he. So he went to the monastery, saluted the Teacher, and told him what had happened. Then the Teacher addressed the monks and asked them, “Monks, what does this mean?” The monks told him what had happened. Said the Teacher, “But, monks, do you not like to have him greet you as ‘Arahats’?” “No, Reverend Sir, we do not like it.” “Nevertheless, monks, this is only an expression of the joy which men feel; [139] and no fault can be found with an expression of joy. Now the love of the Brahman for the Arahats is boundless. Therefore it is proper that you too should sever the stream of Craving and be satisfied with nothing less than the attainment of Arahatship.” So saying, he preached the Law by pronouncing the following Stanza, 383. Cleave the stream boldly, drive away lusts, O Brahman.

Knowing the destruction of the Elements of Being, you shall know the Uncreate, O Brahman.

¹ Text: N iv. 138–139.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

The story goes that one day this Brahman thought to himself, "The Teacher calls his own disciples 'Brahmans:' [142] now I am by birth and lineage a Brahman; therefore he ought to apply this title to me also." So he approached the Teacher and asked him about the matter. The Teacher replied, "I do not call a man a Brahman merely because of his birth and lineage; I call by this title only that man who has reached the supreme goal, Arahatsip." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

386. He that meditates, he that is incorrupt,
He that has done his duty, he that is free from the evil passions,
He that has reached the supreme goal, that man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 5. THE BUDDHAS SHINE BOTH DAY AND NIGHT ¹

By day shines the sun. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at the palace of the Mother of Migāra with reference to Elder Ānanda.

The story goes that, on the Great Terminal Festival, Pasenadi Kosala went to the monastery, adorned with all the adornments, bearing perfumes, garlands, and the like in his hands. [143] At that moment Elder Kāludāyi was sitting in the outer circle of the congregation, having entered into a state of trance. His body was pleasing to look upon, for it was of a golden hue. Now just at that moment the moon rose and the sun set. Elder Ānanda looked at the radiance of the sun as the sun set, and of the moon as the moon rose; then he looked at the radiance of the body of the king and at the radiance of the body of the Elder and at the radiance of the body of the Tathāgata. The Teacher far outshone the radiance of all the others.

The Elder saluted the Teacher and said, "Reverend Sir, as to-day I gazed upon the radiance of all these bodies, the radiance of your body alone satisfied me; for your body far outshone the radiance of all these other bodies." Said the Teacher to the Elder, "Ānanda, the sun shines by day, the moon by night, the king when he is adorned, the Arahatsip when he has left human associations behind and is absorbed in trance. But the Buddhas shine both by night and by day, and shine with fivefold brightness." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iv. 142-144.

387. By day shines the sun, by night gleams the moon,
 The Warrior shines in his armor, the Brahman shines in trance,
 But all the day and all the night the Buddha shines in splendor.

XXVI. 6. WHAT IS A MONK? ¹

Because a man has put away evil. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain monk.

The story is told of a certain Brahman that he retired from the world under a teacher other than the Buddha, and having so done, thought to himself, "The monk Gotama calls his own disciples 'monks;' [145] I too am a monk, and he ought to apply that title to me too." So he approached the Teacher and asked him about the matter. Said the Teacher, "It is not alone for the reason which you have given me that I call a man a monk. But it is because the evil passions and the impurities have gone forth from him that a man is called one who has gone forth, a monk." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

388. Because a man has put away evil, therefore is he called a Brahman;
 Because he walks in righteousness, therefore is he called a monk;
 Because he has banished his own impurities, therefore is he called a monk.

XXVI. 7. THE PATIENT SUBDUES THE VIOLENT ²

No one should strike at a Brahman. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Sāriputta.

The story goes that once upon a time several men gathered together at a certain place and rehearsed the noble qualities of the Elder, saying, [146] "Oh, our noble master is endowed with patience to such a degree that even when men abuse him and strike him, he never gets the least bit angry!" Thereupon a certain Brahman who held false views asked, "Who is this that never gets angry?" "Our Elder." "It must be that nobody ever provoked him to anger." "That is not the case, Brahman." "Well then, I will provoke him to anger." "Provoke him to anger if you can!" "Trust me!" said the Brahman; "I know just what to do to him."

Just then the Elder entered the city for alms. When the Brahman

¹ Text: N iv. 144-145.

² Text: N iv. 145-149.

saw him, he stepped up behind him and struck him a tremendous blow with his fist in the back. "What was that?" said the Elder, and without so much as turning around to look, continued on his way. The fire of remorse sprang up within every part of the Brahman's body. "Oh, how noble are the qualities with which the Elder is endowed!" exclaimed the Brahman. And prostrating himself at the Elder's feet, he said, "Pardon me, Reverend Sir." "What do you mean?" asked the Elder. "I wanted to try your patience and struck you." "Very well, I pardon you." "If, Reverend Sir, you are willing to pardon me, hereafter sit and receive your food only in my house." So saying, the Brahman took the Elder's bowl, the Elder yielding it willingly, and conducting him to his house, served him with food.

The bystanders were filled with anger. "This fellow," said they, "struck with his staff our noble Elder, who is free from all offense; he must not be allowed to get away; we will kill him right here and now." And taking clods of earth and sticks and stones into their hands, they stood waiting at the door of the Brahman's house. As the Elder rose from his seat to go, he placed his bowl in the hand of the Brahman. When the bystanders saw the Brahman going out with the Elder, they said, "Reverend Sir, order this Brahman who has taken your bowl to turn back." "What do you mean, lay disciples?" [147] "That Brahman struck you and we are going to do for him after his deserts." "What do you mean? Did he strike you or me?" "You, Reverend Sir." "If he struck me, he begged my pardon; go your way." So saying, he dismissed the bystanders, and permitting the Brahman to turn back, the Elder went back again to the monastery.

The monks were highly offended. "What sort of thing is this!" they exclaimed; "a Brahman struck the Elder Sāriputta a blow, and the Elder straightway went back to the house of the very Brahman who struck him and accepted food at his hands! From the moment he struck the Elder, for whom will he any longer have any respect? He will go about pounding everybody right and left." At that moment the Teacher drew near. "Monks," said he, "what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?" "This was the subject we were discussing." Said the Teacher, "Monks, no Brahman ever strikes another Brahman; it must have been a householder-Brahman who struck a monk-Brahman; for when a man attains the Fruit of the Third Path, all anger is utterly destroyed in him." So saying, he expounded the Law, pronouncing the following Stanzas,

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

XXVI. 9. REVERENCE TO WHOM REVERENCE IS DUE ¹

That man from whom one learns. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Sāriputta.

This Venerable Elder, we are told, first heard the Law from the lips of Elder Assaji; and from the day when he attained the Fruit of Conversion, in whatever quarter he heard that Elder Assaji was residing, in that direction he would extend his clasped hands in an attitude of reverent supplication, in that direction he would turn his head when he lay down to sleep. The monks said to each other, “Elder Sāriputta holds false views; on this very day he is going about doing reverence to the cardinal points,” and reported the matter to the Tathāgata.

The Teacher caused the Elder to be summoned before him and asked him, “Sāriputta, is the report true that you are going about doing reverence to the cardinal points?” [151] “Reverend Sir, you know me, and you know of yourself whether or not I am going about doing reverence to the cardinal points.” Then said the Teacher, “Monks, Sāriputta is not doing reverence to the cardinal points. The fact is that he first heard the Law from the lips of Elder Assaji, and that from the day when he attained the Fruit of Conversion, he has revered his own teacher. For a monk should reverence the teacher through whom he has learned the Law with the same degree of reverence with which a Brahman reverences the sacred fire.” So saying, he preached the Law, pronouncing the following Stanza,

392. That man from whom one learns the Law preached by the Supremely Enlightened, That man should one reverence profoundly, even as a Brahman reverences the sacrificial fire.

XXVI. 10. WHAT IS A BRAHMAN? ²

It is not matted locks. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain Brahman who wore matted locks. [152]

The story goes that this Brahman said one day to himself, “I am well born on my mother’s side and on my father’s side, for I was reborn in the family of a Brahman. Now the monk Gotama calls his own disciples 'Brahmans.' He ought to apply the same title to me too." So the Brahman went to the Teacher and asked him about the matter. Said the Teacher to the Brahman, "Brahman, I do not call a man a Brahman merely because he wears matted locks, merely because of his birth and lineage. But he that has penetrated the truth, him alone do I call a 'Brahman.'" So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Text: N iv. 150–151.

² Cf. Story xxvi. 13. Text: N iv. 151–152.

393. It is not matted locks or lineage or birth that makes a Brahman;
But he in whom Truth exists, and the Law, he is blessed, he is a Brahman.

XXVI. 11. THE TRICKSTER BRAHMAN ¹

What is the use of your matted locks? This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Pagoda Hall with reference to a certain trickster Brahman who imitated a bat. [153]

This Brahman, so the story goes, used to climb a certain kakudha-tree that grew close to the gate of the city of Vesāli, grasp a branch with his two feet, and swing himself from the branch, head downwards. And hanging thus, he would cry out, "Give me a hundred kapilas! Give me pennies! Give me a slave-woman! If you don't give me what I ask for, I will let myself drop from this tree and kill myself and make this city as though it had never been a city!"

As the Tathāgata, accompanied by the Congregation of Monks, entered the city, the monks saw this Brahman hanging from the tree, and when they departed from the city, still they saw him hanging there, just as he hung when they entered the city. The residents of the city thought to themselves, "This fellow has been hanging thus from this tree ever since early morning; should he fall, he is likely to make this city as though it had never been a city." And because of fear that their city might be destroyed, they complied with all of his demands and gave him all that he asked for. "We have given you all that you asked for," said they. Thereupon he descended from the tree and departed with the spoils.

The monks saw the trickster Brahman wandering about in the neighborhood of the monastery, bellowing like a cow, and immediately recognized him. "Brahman," they asked, "did you get what you ¹ The Story of the Past follows closely Jātaka 325: iii. 84-86. Cf. also Jātakas 188: i. 480-482, and 277: ii. 382-384. Text: N iv. 152-156.

asked for?" "Yes," replied the Brahman, "I got what I asked for." The monks reported the incident to the Tathāgata within the monastery. Said the Teacher, "Monks, this is not the first time this Brahman has been a trickster and a thief; he was a trickster and a thief in a previous state of existence also. [154] But while in his present state of existence he deceives the simple-minded, in his previous state of existence he failed to confound the wise." Complying with a request of the monks, the Teacher related the following

11 a. Story of the Past: The false ascetic and the king of the lizards

Once upon a time a certain ascetic lodged near a certain village of farmers, and this ascetic was a hypocrite. Now there was a certain family that used to look after his needs: by day, of the food on hand, whether hard or soft, they always gave a portion to the ascetic just as they did to their own children; and in the evening they would set aside a portion of the food prepared for their supper, and give it to him on the following day.

One day towards evening, they obtained some lizard-meat, and after cooking it carefully, set aside a portion for the ascetic and gave it to him on the following day. The ascetic smelled the meat, and no sooner had he done so than he was bound fast by the bonds of the craving of taste. "What kind of meat is that?" he asked. "Lizard-meat," was the reply. Having made his round for alms, he took all of the ghee and curds and peppery stuff with him to his hut of leaves and grass and laid them aside.

Now not far from the leaf-hut, in a certain ant-hill, dwelt the king of the lizards, and it was the custom of the king of the lizards from time to time to call upon the ascetic and pay his respects to him. But on that particular day this ascetic said to himself, "I will kill that lizard," and concealing a stick in a fold of his garments, he lay down quite near that ant-hill and pretended to be asleep. When the king of the lizards came out of his ant-hill and approached the ascetic, observing the peculiar attitude in which the ascetic lay, he said to himself, "I don't like the way my teacher acts to-day," and turning around, wriggled off in the opposite direction. The ascetic, noticing that the lizard had turned around, [155] threw the stick at him, intending to kill him, but the stick went wide of the mark. The king of the lizards crawled into the ant-hill, and poking his head out and looking around, said to the ascetic,

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

For at that time, at the end of the first watch, Sakka, attended by a host of deities, drew near the Teacher, saluted the Teacher, sat down respectfully on one side, and listened to the Teacher as he preached the Law in his usual pleasing manner. At that moment Kisā Gotamī said to herself, “I will go see the Teacher,” and proceeded thither through the air. But when she saw Sakka, she turned back. Sakka saw her salute the Teacher and turn back, and straightway asked the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, who is this that draws nigh to you, and then, seeing you, turns back?” The Teacher replied, “Great king, this is my daughter Kisā Gotamī, foremost of the nuns who wear refuse-rags.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

395. That man who wears refuse-rags, that man who is lean, that man whose veins stand out all over his body,
That man who meditates alone in the forest, that man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 13. WHAT IS A BRAHMAN? ¹

I call not a man a Brahman. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain Brahman. [158]

The story goes that this Brahman one day said to himself, “The monk Gotama calls his own disciples ‘Brahmans.’ Now I was reborn in the womb of a Brahman mother; therefore he ought to apply this title to me too.” So he approached the Teacher and asked him about the matter. Said the Teacher to the Brahman, “I do not call a man a Brahman merely because he received a new existence in the womb of a Brahman mother. But he that is without worldly possessions, he that grasps not after the things of this world, him alone I call a Brahman.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

396. I call not a man a Brahman for that he has issued from the womb of a Brahman mother or sprung from a Brahman mother.
Such a man addresses me as “Sir,” such a man has worldly possessions.
But he that is without worldly possessions, he that seeks not the things of this world, him alone I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 14. UGGASENA THE ACROBAT ²

He that has severed all the attachments. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Uggasena. [159] This story has been related in detail in the Commentary on the Stanza beginning with the words, "Give up the things of the past, give up the things of the future."

¹ Cf. xxvi. 10. Text: N iv. 158.

² Cf. xxiv. 6. Text: N iv. 159.

For at that time, when the monks said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, Uggasena says, 'I have no fear;' without a doubt he says that which is not true, utters falsehood," the Teacher replied, "Monks, those who, like my son, have severed the attachments, have no fear." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

397. He that has severed all the attachments, he that trembles not,
He that has escaped from every bond and is unshackled, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 15. A TUG OF WAR ¹

He that has cut the strap. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to two Brahmans. [160]

The story goes that one of these two Brahmans had an ox named Little Red, Culla Rohita, and the other had an ox named Big Red, Mahā Rohita. One day they fell to arguing about the comparative strength of their respective oxen, saying, "My ox is the strong one! my ox is the strong one!" When they were tired of arguing, they said, "What is the use of our arguing about it? We can find out by driving the two oxen." Accordingly they went to the bank of the river Aciravatī, loaded their cart with sand, and yoked up their oxen. At that moment some monks came to the bank of the river for the purpose of bathing. The Brahmans whipped up their oxen, but the cart stirred not an inch. Suddenly the straps and the thongs broke. The Brahmans saw the whole proceeding, and when they returned to the monastery, told the Teacher all about it. Said the Teacher, "Monks, those are the external straps and thongs, which whoso will may cut. But a monk must cut the internal strap of anger and the thong of Craving." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

398. He that has cut the strap, the thong, the rope, and all their appendages,
He that has raised the cross-bar, he that is awakened, him I call a Brahman.

¹ Text: N iv. 160-161.

XXVI. 16. THE PATIENT SUBDUES THE INSOLENT¹

He that endures abuse. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Akkosa Bhāradvāja. [161]

For Akkosa Bhāradvāja had a brother named Bhāradvāja, and a wife named Dhanañjayanī who had attained the Fruit of Conversion. Whenever she sneezed or coughed or stumbled, she would breathe forth the Solemn Utterance, “Praise be to Him That is Highly Exalted, All-Worthy, Supremely Enlightened!” One day, [162] while distribution of food to Brahmans was in progress, she stumbled, and immediately breathed forth that Solemn Utterance as usual with a loud voice.

The Brahman was greatly angered and said to himself, “No matter where it may be, whenever this vile woman stumbles, she utters the praise of this shaveling monkling in this fashion.” And he said to her, “Now, vile woman, I will go and worst that Teacher of yours in an argument.” His wife replied, “By all means go, Brahman; I have never seen the man who could worst the Exalted One in an argument. Nevertheless, go ask the Exalted One a question.” The Brahman went to the Teacher, and without even saluting him, stood on one side and asked him a question, pronouncing the following Stanza,

What must one destroy to live at ease? What must one destroy no more to sorrow?
Of what single condition do you recommend the destruction, Gotama?

In answer, the Teacher pronounced the following Stanza,

Let a man destroy anger, and he will live at ease; let him destroy anger, and he will no more sorrow.

Poisonous is the root of anger, and sweet is the top, Brahman.

Therefore the Noble applaud the destruction of anger, for when this is destroyed, there is no more sorrow. [163]

The Brahman believed in the Teacher, retired from the world, and attained Arahatsip.

Now his younger brother, who was called Akkosa Bhāradvāja, heard the report, “Your brother has retired from the world,” and greatly angered thereat, went and abused the Teacher with wicked, ¹ This story is almost word for word the same as Samyutta, vii. 1. 1: i. 160–161. Text: N iv. 161–164.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Venerable Rāhula invited the Teacher to eat. Said the Teacher, “Rāhula, where did you go?” “To the village where my grandmother lives, Reverend Sir.” “And what did your grandmother say to your preceptor?” “Reverend Sir, my grandmother abused my preceptor roundly.” “What did she say?” “This and that, Reverend Sir.” “And what reply did your preceptor make?” “He made no reply, Reverend Sir.”

When the monks heard this, they began to talk about it in the Hall of Truth. Said they, “Brethren, how wonderful are the qualities of the Elder Sāriputta! Even when his mother abused him in this fashion, he never got a bit angry.” The Teacher drew near and asked the monks, “Monks, what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?” “Such and such.” Then said the Teacher, “Monks, they that have rid themselves of the evil passions are free from anger.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

400. He that is free from anger, he that performs his duties faithfully,
He that keeps the Precepts, he that is free from lust,
He that has subdued himself, he that wears his last body, him I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 18. ARE NOT THE ARAHATS CREATURES OF FLESH AND BLOOD? ¹

Even as water does not cling to a lotus-leaf. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the nun Uppalavannā. [166] The story has been related at length in the Commentary on the Stanza beginning with the words, “As sweet as honey thinks a fool an evil deed.” For it is there said:

Some time later, the throng in the Hall of Truth began the following discussion: “To be sure those that have rid themselves of the Depravities gratify their passions. Why should they not? For they are not kolāpa-trees or ant-hills, but are living creatures with bodies of moist flesh. Therefore they also like the pleasures of love.” At that moment the Teacher drew near. “Monks,” he inquired, “what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?” “Such and such,” was the reply. Said the Teacher, “No, monks, they that have rid themselves of the Depravities neither like the pleasures of love nor gratify their passions. For even as a drop of water which has fallen upon a lotus-leaf does not cling thereto or remain thereon, but rolls over and falls off, even as a grain of mustard-seed does not cling to the point of an awl or remain thereon, but rolls over and falls off, [167] precisely so twofold love clings not to the heart of one that has rid himself of the Depravities or remain there." And joining the connection, he preached the Law, pronouncing the following Stanza,

¹ Cf. Story v. 10. Text: N iv. 166–167.

401. Even as water does not cling to a lotus-leaf, nor a grain of mustard-seed to the point of an awl, Whoso in like manner clings not to the pleasures of sense, him I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 19. A SLAVE LAYS DOWN HIS BURDEN ¹

He that realizes even here in this world the destruction of his own suffering. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain Brahman.

The story goes that at a time previous to the promulgation of the precept forbidding the admission of runaway slaves to the Order, a certain slave of this Brahman ran away, was admitted to the Order, and attained Arahatship. The Brahman searched everywhere, but failed to find his slave. One day, as the former slave was entering the city with the Teacher, the Brahman saw him in the gateway, and took firm hold of his robe. The Teacher turned around and asked, "What do you mean by this, Brahman?" "This is my slave, Sir [168] Gotama." "His burden has fallen from him, Brahman." When the Teacher said, "His burden has fallen from him," the Brahman understood at once that his meaning was, "He is an Arahata." Therefore he addressed the Teacher again, saying, "Is that so, Sir Gotama?" "Yes, Brahman," replied the Teacher, "his burden has fallen from him." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

402. He that realizes right here in this world how his suffering may be ended,
He whose burden has fallen from him, he who has freed himself from the shackles, him I call a Brahman.

¹ Text: N iv. 167-168.

XXVI. 20. KHEMĀ THE WISE ¹

He that possesses profound wisdom. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence on Mount Vulture Peak with reference to the nun Khemā.

For one day, immediately after the first watch, Sakka king of gods came with his retinue of deities, sat down, and listened to the Teacher as he discoursed in his usual pleasant manner on the Law. At that moment the nun Khemā said to herself, “I will go see the Teacher,” and drew near to the presence of the Teacher. [169] But when she saw Sakka, she saluted the Teacher, poised in the air as she was, turned around, and departed. Sakka saw her and asked the Teacher, “Who was that, Reverend Sir, that drew near to your presence, and then, poised in the air as she was, saluted you and turned around and departed?” The Teacher replied, “That, great king, was my daughter Khemā, possessed of great wisdom, knowing well what is the Path and what is not the Path.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

403. He that possesses profound wisdom, he that possesses intelligence,
He that knows what is the Path and what is not the Path,
He that has reached the supreme goal, him I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 21. THE MONK AND THE GODDESS ²

He that holds himself aloof. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Tissa who dwelt in a mountain cave, Pabbhāravāsi Tissa Thera.

The story goes that this Elder received a Subject of Meditation from the Teacher, [170] retired to the forest, and as he was looking about for a suitable lodging, came upon a certain rock cave. The moment he reached the cave, his thoughts became tranquil. Thought he to himself, “If I take up my residence here, I shall be able to bring to a successful termination the duties which I have taken upon myself as a monk.” Now the deity who resided in that rock cave thought to herself, “Hither has come a virtuous monk, and it will be difficult to

¹ Text: N iv. 168–169.

² Cf. xxiii. 5. Text: N iv. 169–174.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

water with which you have bathed the feet of the Elder.” “This I can do,” replied the female lay disciple.

So when the Elder came at the usual time, she provided him with a seat, gave him rice-gruel and hard food, and as he sat eating his meal, bathed his feet. Having so done, she took the water and asked the Elder, “Reverend Sir, I wish to sprinkle this water on the head of the boy.” “Well then, sprinkle it,” said the Elder. Accordingly they did so.

Instantly the deity released the boy and took her stand at the entrance to the rock cave. When the Elder had finished his meal, he rose from his seat, and not abandoning his Subject of Meditation, departed from the house repeating to himself the Thirty-two Constituent Parts of the Body. When the Elder reached the entrance to the rock cave, the deity said to him, “Great physician, great physician, do not enter here.” The Elder stopped right there and said, “Who are you?” [172] “I am the deity residing here.”

The Elder thought to himself, “Has there ever been an occasion when I have performed the work of a physician?” He surveyed the whole course of his life from the day when he stood within the inclosure and was admitted to full membership in the Order, and perceiving not so much as a freckle or a black speck on his virtue, said to the deity, “I see no occasion when I have performed the work of a physician; why do you speak thus?”

Said the deity, “You see no occasion?” Said the Elder, “Precisely so; I see no occasion.” “I will inform you.” “Yes, pray inform me.” “Let talk stand afar off for the moment. Did you, or did you not, on this very day sprinkle the water with which your feet were bathed on the head of the son of a female lay disciple who is your supporter, when he was seized by an evil spirit?” “Yes, I did so sprinkle water.” “Do you not see this?” “Is this what you are talking about?” “Yes, this is what I am talking about.”

The Elder thought to himself, “The self within me is indeed endowed with right resolve! My conduct is indeed in accordance with the precepts of the teaching which I have received! Even this deity could not see so much as a freckle or a black speck on my virtue, which I have preserved in accordance with the four precepts of purity, and saw only the fact that I had sprinkled on the head of a boy the water with which my feet were bathed.” And as he thought upon the perfection of his virtue, intense joy sprang up within him. Suppressing this emotion, without lifting a foot from the ground, he then and there attained Arahatsip. And admonishing the deity, he said, "Since you have foully assailed a monk like me whose virtue is pure and spotless, no longer remain here in this place of residence; depart hence." So saying, he breathed forth the following Solemn Utterance: [173]

My life is pure, my monkhood stainless.

Do not assail one who is pure; depart from this forest.

The Elder continued to reside there during the remainder of the season of the rains and then returned to the Teacher. The monks asked him, "Brother, have you brought to a successful termination the duties which you took upon yourself as a monk?" Then the Elder told the monks the whole story of his experiences, beginning at the day when he entered upon residence. "Brother," said the monks, "when the deity spoke thus to you, were you not angry?" "No, I was not angry."

The monks said to the Tathāgata, "Reverend Sir, this monk utters a falsehood. He says that even when the deity said this and that to him, he did not get angry." The Teacher listened to what they had to say, and then replied, "No, monks, my son does not become angry. He holds converse neither with laymen nor with monks; he lives a life apart, desires but little, and is contented." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

404. He that holds himself aloof both from householders and from the houseless,
He that wanders about without a home, he that desires but little, such a man
I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 22. THE MONK AND THE WOMAN ¹

He that has laid aside the rod. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a certain monk. [174]

It appears that this monk, upon receiving a Subject of Meditation from the Teacher, retired to the forest, applied himself diligently to the practice of meditation, and attained Arahatsip. Thereupon he said to himself, "I will inform the Teacher of the great blessing which I have received," and set out from the forest. Now a woman living in a certain village through which he passed, had just had a quarrel with her husband, and as soon as her husband was out of the house, said to herself, “I will return to the house of my family.” So saying, she set out on the road. As she went along the road, she saw the Elder. “I’ll keep not far from this Elder,” thought she, and followed close behind him. The Elder never looked at her at all.

¹ Text: N iv. 174-176.

When her husband returned home and saw his wife nowhere about the house, he concluded to himself, “She must have gone to the village where her family lives,” and followed after her. When he saw her, he thought to himself, “It cannot be that this woman would enter this forest all by herself; in whose company is she going?” All of a sudden he saw the Elder. [175] Thought he, “This monk must have taken her away with him,” and went up to the monk and threatened him. Said the woman, “This good monk never so much as looked at me or spoke to me; do not say anything to him.” Her husband replied, “Do you mean to tell me that you took yourself off in this fashion? I will treat him as you alone deserve to be treated.” And in a burst of rage, out of hatred for the woman, he beat the Elder soundly, and having so done, took the woman with him and returned home.

The Elder’s whole body was covered with weals. After his return to the monastery the monks who rubbed his body noticed the weals and asked him, “What does this mean?” He told them the whole story. Then the monks asked him, “Brother, but when this fellow struck you thus, what did you say? or did you get angry?” “No, brethren, I did not get angry.” Thereupon the monks went to the Teacher and reported the matter to him, saying, “Reverend Sir, when we asked this monk, ‘Did you get angry?’ he replied, ‘No, brethren, I did not get angry.’ He does not speak the truth, he utters falsehood.” The Teacher listened to what they had to say and then replied, “Monks, they that have rid themselves of the evil passions have laid aside the rod; even for those that strike them, they cherish no anger.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

405. He that has laid aside the rod, and inflicts not punishment on living beings, whether animate or inanimate,
 He that kills not nor causes to kill, such a man I call a Brahman.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Now the novices had had nothing to eat from early morning and sat there famished with hunger. By the power of their merit Sakka's seat showed signs of heat. Considering within himself what might be the cause, he perceived that the novices had sat there from early morning and that they were weak and exhausted. "It is my duty to go there," thought Sakka. So disguising himself as an old Brahman, worn out by old age, he went to the Brahmans' pale and sat down in the most conspicuous seat of the Brahmans. [178] When the Brahman saw him, he thought to himself, "Now my wife will be delighted," and saying, "Come, let us go home," he took him and went back home with him. When the Brahman's wife saw him, her heart was filled with delight. She took the rugs and mats which were spread over two seats, spread them over one, and said to him, "Noble Sir, sit here."

When Sakka entered the house, he saluted the four novices with the Five Rests, and finding a place for himself at the edge of the seats where the novices were sitting, sat down cross-legged on the ground. When the Brahman's wife saw him, she said to the Brahman, "To be sure you have brought a Brahman, but you have brought back with you one old enough to be your father. He is going about saluting novices young enough to be his grandsons. What use have we for him? Put him out!"

The Brahman seized him first by the shoulder, then by the arm, finally by the waist, and tried his best to drag him out, but he refused to stir from where he sat. Then the Brahman's wife said to her husband, "Come, Brahman, you take hold of one arm and I will take hold of the other." So the Brahman and his wife both took hold of his two arms, belabored him about the back, and dragged him through the door out of the house. Nevertheless Sakka remained sitting in the same place in which he had sat before, waving his hands back and forth.

When the Brahman and his wife returned and saw him sitting in the very same place in which he had sat before, they screamed screams of terror and let him go. At that moment Sakka made known his identity. Then the Brahman and his wife gave food to their guests. When those five persons had received food, they departed. One of the novices broke through the circular peak of the house, the second broke through the front part of the roof, the third broke through the back part of the roof, the fourth plunged into the earth, while Sakka departed from the house by another route. Thus did those five persons depart from the house by five different routes. [179] From that time on, so it is said, that house was known as the House with the Five Openings.

When the novices returned to the monastery, the monks asked them, “Brethren, what was it like?” “Pray don’t ask us,” replied the novices. “The Brahman’s wife fumed with rage the moment she saw us. She refused to allow us to sit on the seats which she had prepared and said to her husband, ‘Make haste and bring an old Brahman.’ Our preceptor came, and seeing us, said, ‘These Brahmans who are sitting here ought to receive food.’ So saying, he ordered his bowl to be brought to him and departed. Then the Brahman’s wife said to her husband, ‘Bring another old Brahman.’ Then the Brahman brought Elder Moggallāna the Great. When Elder Moggallāna the Great saw us, he said the same thing as had Elder Sāriputta and departed. Then the Brahman’s wife said to her husband, ‘These Elders do not wish to eat; Brahman, go to the Brahmans’ pale and bring back a single old Brahman.’ The Brahman went there and brought back Sakka, who came in the disguise of a Brahman. When Sakka arrived, the Brahman and his wife gave us food.”

“But were you not angry with them for what they did?” “No, we were not angry.” When the monks heard their reply, they reported the matter to the Teacher, saying, “Reverend Sir, when these monks say, ‘We were not angry,’ they say what is not true, they utter falsehood.” Said the Teacher, “Monks, they that have rid themselves of the evil passions oppose not them by whom they are opposed.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [180]

406. He that opposes not those by whom he is opposed, he that is meek among those that have taken the rod,
He that is free from craving among those that crave, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 24. DID BIG WAYMAN YIELD TO ANGER?¹

That man from whom lust. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Big Wayman.

This Venerable Elder, when Little Wayman was unable in three months to learn by heart a single Stanza, expelled him from the monastery and closed the door, saying to him, “You lack the capacity to receive religious instruction, and you have also fallen away from the enjoyments of the life of a householder. Why should you continue to live here any longer? Depart hence." The monks began a discussion of the incident, saying, "Brethren, Elder Big Wayman did this and that. [181] Doubtless anger springs up sometimes even within those who have rid themselves of the Depravities." At that moment the Teacher drew near and asked them, "Monks, what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?" When the monks told him the subject of their conversation, he said, "No, monks, those who have rid themselves of the Depravities have not the Contaminations, lust, hatred, and delusion. What my son did he did because he put the Law, and the Spirit of the Law, before all things else." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ Cf. Story ii. 3 b (text: i. 244). Text: N iv. 180–181.

407. That man from whom lust and hatred and pride and envy have been made to fall,
Even as a grain of mustard-seed from the point of an awl, that man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 25. THE FORCE OF HABIT¹

Free from harshness. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to Elder Pilindavaccha.

It seems that this Venerable Elder was in the habit of accosting both laymen and monks with the epithet commonly applied only to outcasts. "Come, vile fellow! Go, vile fellow," he would say to everyone he met. [182] One day several monks complained about his conduct to the Teacher, saying, "Reverend Sir, Venerable Pilindavaccha accosts the monks with an epithet applicable only to outcasts." The Teacher caused him to be summoned before him. "Is the charge true, Vaccha," said the Teacher, "that you accost the monks with an epithet applicable only to outcasts?" "Yes, Reverend Sir," replied Pilindavaccha, "the charge is true."

The Teacher called before his mind the previous abodes of that Venerable Elder and said to the monks, "Monks, be not offended with the monk Vaccha. Monks, it is not because Vaccha entertains feelings of hatred within him, that he accosts his brother monks with ¹ Cf. Udāna, iii. 6: 28-29; Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Pilindavaccha; also Story xviii. 9. Text: N iv. 181-182.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

is not true and utters falsehood.” Said the Teacher, “No, monks, what this monk says is quite true; they that have rid themselves of the evil passions do not take what belongs to others.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [184]

409. Whosoever here in this world takes nothing that is not given to him,
Whether it be long or short, coarse or fine, beautiful or ugly, him I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 27. SĀRIPUTTA IS MISUNDERSTOOD ¹

He that has no desires. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to the Elder Sāriputta.

The story goes that once upon a time Elder Sāriputta, accompanied by his retinue of five hundred monks, went to a certain monastery and entered upon residence for the season of the rains. When the people saw the Elder, they promised to provide him with all of the requisites for residence. But even after the Elder had celebrated the Terminal Festival, not all of the requisites had as yet arrived. So when he set out to go to the Teacher he said to the monks, “When the people bring the requisites for the young monks and novices, pray take them and send them on; should they not bring them, be good enough to send me word.” [185] So saying, he went to the Teacher.

The monks immediately began to discuss the matter, saying, “Judging by what Elder Sāriputta said to-day, Craving still persists within him. For when he went back, he said to the monks with reference to the requisites for residence given to his own fellow residents, ‘Pray send them on; otherwise be good enough to send me word.’” Just then the Teacher drew near. “Monks,” said he, “what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?” “Such and such,” was the reply. Said the Teacher, “No, monks, my son has no Craving. But the following thought was present to his mind, ‘May there be no loss of merit to the people, and no loss of holy gain to the young monks and novices.’ This is the reason why he spoke as he did.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

410. He that has no desires, either in this world or in the next,
He that is free from desires and free from fetters, him I call a Brahman.

¹ Text: N iv. 184–185.

XXVI. 28. MOGGALLĀNA IS MISUNDERSTOOD ¹

He that has no longings. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Moggallāna the Great. [186]

This story is similar to the preceding, except that on this occasion the Teacher, perceiving that Elder Moggallāna the Great was free from Craving, pronounced the following Stanza,

411. He that has no longings, he that fully understands, he that entertains no doubts,
He that has plunged into the Deathless, him I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 29. RENOUNCE BOTH GOOD AND EVIL ².

Whosoever in this world has escaped from the bonds both of good and of evil. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Pubbārāma with reference to the Elder Revata. The story has already been related in detail in the Commentary on the Stanza beginning with the words, Whether it be in the village or in the forest; for it is there said:

Again one day the monks began a discussion, saying, "Oh, how great was the novice's gain! Oh, how great was the novice's merit! To think that one man should build five hundred habitations for five hundred monks!" Just then the Teacher drew near. "Monks," said he, "what is the subject that engages your attention now as you sit here all gathered together?" "Such and such," was the reply. Then said the Teacher, "Monks, my [187] son has neither merit nor demerit: he has renounced both." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

412. Whosoever in this world has escaped from the bonds both of good and of evil, Whosoever is free from sorrow, free from defilement, free from impurity, him I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 30. ELDER MOONLIGHT ³

He that is spotless as the moon. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Moonlight, Candābha. The story from beginning to end is as follows:

¹ Text: N iv. 185-186.

² Cf. vii. 9. Text: N iv. 186-187.

³ With xxvi. 30 b cf. xxvi. 37. Text: N iv. 187-192.

30 a. Story of the Past: A forester presents a moon-disk

In times long past, a certain merchant living at Benāres said one day to himself, "I will go to the frontier and get me some sandalwood." So taking a large supply of garments, ornaments, and the like, he went to the border with five hundred carts, and halting for the night at the gate of a village, inquired of some youthful cowherds in the forest, "Is there any in this village who is a forester?" [188] "There is." "What is his name?" "So-and-so." "What is the name of his wife, and what are the names of his children?" "So-and-so." "In what place is his house situated?" "In such-and-such a place." The merchant followed the directions given him by the cowherds, seated himself in a comfortable carriage, went to the door of the forester's house, alighted from the carriage, entered the house, and inquired for that woman, mentioning such and such a name.

The woman thought to herself, "It must be some kinsman of ours." So she came quickly and provided him with a seat. The merchant sat down there, and mentioning the name of her husband, inquired after him, saying, "Where is my friend?" "Master, he has gone to the forest." "My son So-and-so and my daughter So-and-so, where are they?" Thus did he make inquiries after all the members of the family, mentioning the name of each individual. Having so done, he presented to them all of those garments and ornaments, saying, "When my friend returns from the forest, pray give him too this garment and this ornament." The woman bestowed high honor on the merchant, and when her husband returned from the forest, said to him, "Husband, the moment this visitor arrived, he mentioned the name of each member of the family and gave this and that." The forester rendered the merchant the courtesies which were his due.

In the evening, as the merchant lay on his couch, he asked the forester, "Friend, as you have walked about the foot of the mountain, have you ever seen much of anything?" "Nothing except that [189] I have seen a good many trees with red branches." "Many trees?" "Yes, a good many." "Well then, show them to us." So the merchant accompanied the forester to the foot of the mountain, cut down a large number of red sandalwood trees, and filled therewith his five hundred carts. On the way back the merchant said to the forester, "Friend,

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Brahmans saw them, they asked them, “Where are you going?” “To the Teacher to hear the Law.” “Come! What will you gain by going there? There is no supernatural power like the supernatural power possessed by our Brahman Moonlight: they that but stroke his body, receive such and such power and glory; come have a look at him.” “What does the supernatural power of your Brahman amount to? It is our Teacher alone who possesses great supernatural power.” And straightway they fell to arguing, but each of the two parties was unsuccessful in its efforts to convince the other. Finally the Brahmans said, “Let us go to the monastery and find out whether it is our Moonlight or your Teacher that possesses the greater supernatural power.” [191] And taking him with them, they set out for the monastery.

The Teacher, even as Moonlight approached him, caused the moonlight to disappear. The result was that when Moonlight stood in the presence of the Teacher, he resembled nothing so much as a crow in a basket of charcoal. The Brahmans took him one side, and immediately the radiance reappeared, bright as ever. Again they brought him into the presence of the Teacher, and straightway the radiance disappeared, just as it had the first time. When Moonlight went for the third time into the presence of the Teacher and observed that the radiance disappeared, he thought to himself, “Without a doubt this man knows a charm by which he can make this radiance disappear.” So he asked the Teacher, “Is it not a fact that you know a charm by which you can make this radiance of mine disappear?” “Yes, I know such a charm.” “Well then, impart it to me.” “It cannot be imparted to one who has not retired from the world.”

Thereupon Moonlight said to his fellow Brahmans, “As soon as I learn this charm, I shall be the foremost man in all the Land of the Rose-apple. You remain right here and I will retire from the world and in but a few days learn this charm.” So he asked the Teacher to admit him to the Order, retired from the world, and subsequently was admitted to full membership in the Order. The Teacher taught him the Formula of Meditation which consists of the Thirty-two Constituent Parts of the Body. “What is this?” asked Candābha. “This is something which you must repeat as a preliminary to acquiring this charm,” replied the Teacher.

From time to time the Brahmans came to him and asked, “Have you learned the charm yet?” “Not yet, but I am learning it.” In but a few days he attained Arahatsip. When the Brahmans came and asked him again, he made answer, “Depart ye! now have I reached the state of one who will never return.” The monks reported the matter to the Tathāgata, saying, “Reverend Sir, this Brahman says what is not true, utters falsehood.” Said the Teacher, “Monks, worldly joy has been extinguished for my son; he speaks the truth.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [192]

413. He that is spotless as the moon, pure, serene, and clear,
He in whom the essence of joy is extinct, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 31. SEVEN YEARS IN THE WOMB ¹

Whoever has passed over this quagmire. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Kuṇḍadhāna-vana near Kuṇḍakoli with reference to the Elder Sivali.

For once upon a time Suppavāsā, a daughter of the Koliya clan, carried a child in her womb for seven years. And for seven days, since the child lay awry, she was stricken with distressing, acute, and bitter pains, and said to herself, “Supremely Enlightened, truly, is that Exalted One who preaches a Religion to the putting away of suffering such as this. [193] Walking in Righteousness, truly, is the Order of Disciples of that Exalted One, which walks in righteousness to the putting away of suffering such as this. Blessed, truly, is ¹ Parallels: Udāna, ii. 8: 15–18; Jātaka, 100: i. 407–408; Thera-Gāthā Commentary, lx; Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Suppavāsā. The Udāna version is more detailed than the Jātaka version, and the Jātaka version more detailed than the Dhammapada Commentary version. Dh. cm. iv. 192^{1a}–193⁶ is almost word for word the same as Udāna, 15⁸–15¹⁵, agreeing with the Udāna rather than with the Jātaka. According to the Udāna and the Jātaka, a lay supporter of Moggallāna postpones his entertainment of the Buddha at the latter’s request, to enable him to accept Suppavāsā’s invitation. The Dhammapada Commentary omits this. On the other hand, the Udāna has nothing to say about Sivali’s retirement from the world, which the Jātaka gives at length, and the Dhammapada Commentary very briefly. The author of the Dhammapada Commentary has evidently used both the Udāna and the Jātaka as his authorities. With the account of the Buddha’s easing of Suppavāsā’s birth-pains by a benediction, cf. the account in Story xiii. 6 (Majjhima, 86) of Aṅgulimālā’s easing of a woman’s birth-pains by an Act of Truth. For Suppavāsā’s entertainment of the Buddha, see Aṅguttara, ii. 62–63. For the story of Sivali as recipient of offerings, see Dhammapada Commentary, vii. 9 b; Thera-Gāthā Commentary, lx; Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Sivali. For the story of Sivali’s past deeds, see Dhammapada Commentary, vii. 9 c; Jātaka 100: i. 409; Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Sivali. The account in Thera-Gāthā Commentary, lx, of Sivali’s birth, retirement from the world, and reception of offerings, is evidently derived from at least three different sources; namely, Jātaka Book, Dhammapada Commentary, and Aṅguttara Commentary. Text: N iv. 192–194.

Nibbāna, where suffering such as this exists no more.” With these three reflections did she endure that pain. And she sent her husband to the Teacher to greet him in her name. When her husband greeted the Teacher and conveyed her message, the Teacher said, “May Suppavāsā, the young woman of the Koliya clan, be healthy; in health and happiness may she bring forth a healthy son.”

The moment the Teacher uttered these words, Suppavāsā brought forth a healthy son in health and happiness. Forthwith she invited the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha to be her guests and for seven days gave bountiful offerings. From the day of his birth her son took a water-pot provided with a strainer and strained water for the Congregation of Monks. After a time he retired from the world, became a monk, and attained Arahatsip. One day the monks began a discussion in the Hall of Truth: “Only think, brethren! So illustrious a monk as this, possessing the faculties requisite for the attainment of Arahatsip, endured suffering all that time in the womb of his mother! How great indeed was the suffering this monk passed through!” The Teacher drew near and asked, “Monks, what is the subject that engages your conversation now, as you sit here all gathered together?” When they told him, he said, “Monks, it is even so. My son has obtained release from all this suffering, and now, having realized Nibbāna, abides in the bliss thereof.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza, [194]

414. Whoever has crossed this quagmire, difficult to cross, rebirth, delusion;
Whoever has crossed and gained the other side;
Whoever is devoted to meditation, free from lust, free from doubt,
Free from Craving, tranquil, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 32. A COURTEZAN TEMPTS THE MONK OCEAN-OF-BEAUTY¹

Whoever in this world. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Ocean-of-Beauty, Sundarasamudda.

¹ The introductory part of this story (text: iv. 194^{1a}–196^{2b}) is a very free version of the Introduction to Jātaka 14: i. 156–157. The account of the temptation of the monk (text: iv. 196^{2b}–197¹²) is almost word for word the same as Jātaka, v. 433^{2a}–434⁸. This story affords an unusually striking example of the literary methods of the author. The words “Khalu samma Puṇṇamukha,” appropriate enough at Jātaka, v. 433^{2a}, are absurdly out of place at Dh. cm., iv. 196^{2b}. From this story is derived Thera-Gāthā Commentary, ccxxiv. Text: N iv. 194–199.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

make his round for alms, she obtained a house in this street and took up her abode therein. And early in the morning she prepared choice food, and when the Elder entered the street to make his round for alms, she gave him alms. After a few days had passed, she said to him, "Reverend Sir, sit down right here and eat your meal." So saying, she offered to take his bowl, and the Elder yielded his bowl willingly. Then she served him with choice food, and having so done, said to him, "Reverend Sir, right here is the most delightful spot to which you could come on your round for alms." For a few days she enticed him to sit on the veranda, and there provided him with choice food.

Next she won the favor of some small boys by treating them with cakes, and said to them, "See here, boys; when the Elder comes to the house, you come too. And when you come, kick up the dust. And even if I tell you to stop, pay no attention to what I say." So on the following day, while the Elder was eating his meal, the boys came to the house and kicked up the dust. And when the mistress of the house told them to stop, they paid no attention to what she said. On the next day she said to the Elder, "Reverend Sir, these boys keep coming here and kicking up the dust, and even when I tell them to stop, pay no attention to what I say; sit inside of the house." For a few days she seated him inside of the house and there provided him with choice food. Then she treated the boys again and said to them, "Boys, while the Elder is eating his meal, make a loud noise. And even if I tell you to stop, pay no attention to what I say." The boys did as they were told.

On the following day she said to the Elder, "Reverend Sir, the noise in this place is unbearable. In spite of all I do to stop them, these boys pay no attention to what I say; sit on the upper floor of the mansion." The Elder gave his consent. She then climbed to the top of the mansion, making the Elder precede her, and closing the doors after her. Now the Elder had taken upon himself the strict obligation to receive alms only by making an unbroken round from door to door. But in spite of this fact, so firmly bound was he by the bonds of the craving of taste that he complied with her suggestion and climbed to the topmost floor of the seven-storied mansion. The woman provided the Elder with a seat.

In forty ways, friend Puṇṇamukha, does a woman accost a man:¹

[197] She yawns, she bows down, she makes amorous gestures, she pretends to be abashed, she rubs the nails of one hand or foot with the nails of the other hand or foot, she places one foot on the other foot, she scratches on the ground with a stick. She causes her boy to leap up, she causes her boy to leap down, she dallies with her boy and makes him dally with her, she kisses him and makes him kiss her, she eats food and makes him eat food, she gives and begs for gifts, she imitates whatever he does. She talks in a loud tone, she talks in a low tone; she talks as in public, she talks as in private. While dancing, singing, playing musical instruments, weeping, making amorous gestures, adorning herself, she laughs and looks. She sways her hips, she jiggles her waist-gear, uncovers her thigh, covers her thigh, displays her breast, displays her arm-pit, and displays her navel. She buries the pupils of her eyes, lifts her eyebrows, scratches her lips, and dangles her tongue. She takes off her loin-cloth, puts on her loin-cloth, takes off her turban, and puts on her turban.

Thus did that woman employ all the devices of a woman, all the graces of a woman. And standing before the Elder, she recited the following Stanza,

Dyed in lac and clad in slippers are the feet of a harlot.

You are young and you are mine; I am young and I am yours.

We will both retire from the world later on, and lean on a staff.

Thought the Elder, “Alas, I have committed a grievous sin! I did not consider what I was doing.” And he was deeply moved. At that moment the Teacher, although seated within the Jetavana, forty-five leagues distant, [198] saw the whole affair and smiled. Elder Ānanda asked him, “Reverend Sir, what is the cause, what is the occasion of your smiling?” “Ānanda, in the city of Rājagaha, on the topmost floor of a seven-storied palace, there is a battle on between the monk Ocean-of-Beauty and a harlot.” “Who is going to win, Reverend Sir, and who is going to lose?” The Teacher replied, “Ānanda, Ocean-of-Beauty is going to win, and the harlot is going to lose.” Having thus proclaimed that the Elder would win the victory, the Teacher, remaining seated where he was, sent forth a luminous image of himself and said, “Monk, renounce both lusts and free yourself from desire.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

¹ This paragraph is taken bodily from Jātaka, v. 433^{2a}–434⁸. See p. 308, note.

415. Whoever in this world renounces lusts, whoever abandons the house-life and retires from the world,

Whoever has extinguished the essence of lust, such a man I call a Brahman.

Native gloss. — The individual here in this world who, having abandoned both lusts, retires from the world, the individual in whom lust is extinct and existence is extinct, him I call a Brahman.

At the end of the lesson the Elder attained Arahatsip, rose into the air by magical power, passing through the circular peak of the house; and returning once more to Sāvatti, praised the body of the Teacher and saluted the Teacher.

The monks discussed the incident in the Hall of Truth, saying, “Brethren, all because of tastes perceptible by the tongue the Elder Ocean-of-Beauty was wellnigh lost, but the Teacher became his salvation.” The Teacher, hearing their words, said, “Monks, this is not the first time I have become the salvation of this monk, bound by the bonds of the craving of taste; the same thing happened in a previous state of existence also.” In compliance with a request of the monks that he make the matter clear, the Teacher told them a [199]

Story of the Past: The antelope and the bait of honey Vātamiga Jātaka.¹

[Saṅjaya, gardener of the king of Benāres, entices a wild antelope into the king’s pleasure by baiting the grass with honey. Having gained the animal’s confidence, he continues the use of honey as a bait, entices the antelope into the king’s house, and captures him.]

There is nothing worse, men say, than the allurements of taste, whether it be at home or among one’s friends.

Through the allurements of taste Saṅjaya enticed the antelope into the house and captured him.

Having related in detail this Vātamiga Jātaka, found in the First Book, the Teacher identified the persons of the Jātaka as follows, “At that time Ocean-of-Beauty was the antelope; the king’s minister who by reciting this Stanza obtained the release of the antelope, was I myself.”

¹ Jātaka 14: i. 157–158.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

stalk of sugar-cane, I will give him the price thereof; if he demands the merit acquired by the gift thereof, I will make over the merit to him.” Accordingly he said to the Private Buddha, “Reverend Sir, pray hold out your bowl to me;” and untying the second stalk of sugar-cane, gave him the sap. We are told that it never occurred to the younger brother to think, “My brother will fetch another stalk of sugar-cane from the field and eat it.”

Now since the Private Buddha had drunk the sap of the first sugar-cane, he desired to share the sap of the second with the other Private Buddhas, and with this desire in his heart resumed his seat. The younger brother, understanding his purpose, saluted him with the Five Rests and made the following Earnest Wish, “Reverend Sir, as the result of my gift to you of this choice sap, may I win glory in the Worlds of the Gods and the world of men, and may I finally attain the state you have attained.” The Private Buddha replied, “So be it,” and returned thanks by pronouncing the two Stanzas beginning with the words, “May all you’ve wished and prayed for turn out well.” And having formed the resolution that the younger brother should one day comprehend the Law, [201] he proceeded through the air to Gandhamādana and distributed that sap among five hundred Private Buddhas.

When the younger brother had seen this miracle, he went back to his older brother. “Where did you go?” inquired the older brother. The younger brother replied, “I went to look at the field of sugar-cane.” “Why should a man like you go to a field of sugar-cane? You should have brought back with you one or two stalks of sugar-cane.” “Yes, brother, I brought back with me two stalks of sugar-cane. But I saw a certain Private Buddha, and gave him the sap of my own sugar-cane. Then I thought to myself, ‘I will give my older brother either the price of his sugar-cane or the merit thereof.’ With this thought in mind I gave the Private Buddha the sap from your sugar-cane also. Now which of the two will you take, the price of the sugar-cane, or the merit thereof?” “But what did the Private Buddha do?” “He drank the sap from my sugar-cane; and then, taking with him the sap from your sugar-cane, proceeded through the air to Gandhamādana and distributed that sap among five hundred Private Buddhas.” As the younger brother related his story, the body of the older brother became completely suffused with joy. And forthwith the older brother made the following Earnest Wish, “As the result of this gift may I attain the Truth attained by this Private Buddha.” Thus the younger brother prayed for three Attainments, but the older brother in one sentence prayed for Arahatsip. This was their former deed.

When the two brothers had lived out the term of life allotted to them, they passed out of that state of existence and were reborn in the World of the Gods, where they spent the period of an interval between two Buddhas. While they yet remained in the World of the Gods, the Supreme Buddha Vipassī appeared in the world. Passing from the World of the Gods, they obtained rebirth in the city of Bandhumatī in a certain family of station as older and younger brothers respectively. The parents named the older brother Sena and the younger brother [202] Aparājita.

When they reached manhood, they married and founded families and lived the lives of householders. One day the householder Sena heard the herald of the Law proclaim throughout the city of Bandhumatī, "The Jewel of the Buddha has appeared in the world, the Jewel of the Law has appeared in the world, the Jewel of the Order has appeared in the world. Give alms and do works of merit. Take upon yourselves the obligations of fast-day on this, the eighth day; on this, the fourteenth day; on this, the fifteenth day. Hear the Law." Likewise the householder Sena beheld the multitude going before breakfast to give alms and after breakfast to hear the Law. "Where are you going?" he asked. "To hear the Teacher preach the Law," they replied. "I will go too," said the householder Sena, and accompanying them, sat down in the outer circle of the congregation. The Teacher, knowing the thoughts of his heart, preached the Law in orderly sequence. When the householder Sena had heard the Teacher preach the Law, he yearned to retire from the world and become a monk. Accordingly he requested the Teacher to admit him to the Order.

The Teacher asked him, "But, layman, have you no kinsmen of whom you should ask leave?" "Yes, Reverend Sir, I have." "Well then, ask leave of them, and return when you have so done." So the householder Sena went to his younger brother and said to him, "Whatever property is in this house, all this shall belong to you." "But what about you, master?" "I intend to retire from the world and become a monk under the Teacher." "Master, what say you? When my mother died, I gained in you as it were a mother; when my father died, I gained in you as it were a father. This household possesses great wealth. One can live the life of a householder and still perform works of merit; do not do this." "I have heard the Teacher preach the Law, and I cannot fulfill the Law amid the cares of the household life. I am determined to do naught other than retire from the world and become a monk; therefore turn back.” With these words he bade his brother turn back. Having so done, he retired from the world and became a monk under the Teacher. Subsequently he was admitted a full member of the Order, and in no long time attained Arahatsip.

The younger brother thought to himself, “I will render the usual offerings in honor of my brother’s retirement from the world.” So for seven days he gave alms to the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, and when he had so done, [203] saluted his brother and said, “Reverend Sir, you have found for yourself escape from existence; but I am bound by the five pleasures of sense, and cannot go forth from the world and become a monk. Tell me therefore of some great work of merit which I can perform and still remain a householder.” The Elder replied, “Well said, well said, wise man! Build a Perfumed Chamber for the Teacher.” “Very well,” said the younger brother, accepting the suggestion.

So the younger brother caused logs of all kinds to be procured, and had them trimmed and fashioned to form the pillars and other parts of the building. He caused one block of wood to be inlaid with gold, another with silver, another with gems; and proceeding in this manner, he erected a Perfumed Chamber composed entirely of blocks of wood inlaid with the seven precious minerals. Having so done, he caused the wooden framework to be covered with roof-tiles inlaid with the seven precious minerals.

Now while the Perfumed Chamber was building, Aparājita, himself a nephew and namesake of the younger brother, came and said, “I also should like to do something; let me also have a share in the merit, uncle.” His uncle replied, “My dear nephew, I cannot grant your request; I intend to do something the merit of which cannot be shared with others.” Although the nephew repeated his request many times, he was unable to obtain a share of the merit. Deciding that an elephant-stable was needed in front of the Perfumed Chamber, he caused an elephant-stable to be erected, composed entirely of the seven precious minerals. He it was who was reborn in the present dispensation as Treasurer Ram, Mendaka.¹

Now there were three great windows in the Perfumed Chamber,

¹ For the story of Treasurer Ram, see xviii. 10.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies to carry the jewels away with them, we cannot stop them. But the householder may think, ‘Although his own retainers are carrying away all these jewels scattered about his chamber, he is making no effort to stop them,’ and may conceive hatred towards me and may go to Hell for it.” For this reason, we are told, the Teacher hesitated at the gate. [205] But when the householder said, “Reverend Sir, the Exalted One shall be my sole protection; pray enter,” he immediately entered.

The householder posted guards on all sides and gave orders to his men, “Sirs, you must stop all that attempt to carry away jewels in the folds of their garments or in baskets or in sacks, but do not stop those who go away with their hands full.” And he caused the following proclamation to be made within the city, “I have scattered the seven kinds of precious minerals in the apartment of the Perfumed Chamber. When those who come to hear the Law depart, the poor may fill both of their hands with jewels and carry them away, and even those who are in good circumstances may take a single handful.” This, we are told, was the thought in his mind, “Those that possess faith will come solely for the purpose of hearing the Law; but those that do not possess faith will be attracted here by their desire for wealth and through hearing the Law will obtain release from suffering.” Therefore he made this proclamation for the purpose of benefiting the people.

The people took the jewels away with them in accordance with the orders given by the householder. Once and twice and thrice the householder poured out jewels until they lay knee-deep on the ground. Now at the feet of the Teacher he placed a precious stone of priceless value, as large as a nugget of tin. This, we are told, was the thought in his mind, “Those who behold the radiance which proceeds from the golden-hued body of the Teacher will find no satisfaction in looking at the radiance from a precious stone.” Therefore it was that he did this. And those who looked at the Teacher found no satisfaction in looking at the jewel.

Now one day a certain Brahman, a holder of false views, thought to himself, “They say that a precious stone of great value has been laid at the feet of the Teacher; I will carry it away with me.” So he went to the monastery, and mingling with the crowd, entered for the purpose of saluting the Teacher. The householder, [206] concluding solely from the way in which the Brahman entered that he was seeking to get possession of the jewel, thought to himself, “I hope he will not take it!” The Brahman stretched out his arms at the Teacher's feet as if to salute him, took the jewel, put it in a fold of his garment, and went out.

The householder could not retain his composure toward the Brahman. At the conclusion of the sermon he approached the Teacher and said to him, "Reverend Sir, thrice have I strewn the ground about the Perfumed Chamber knee-deep with the seven kinds of precious minerals, nor have I entertained unfriendly feelings towards any that have taken jewels away with them; nay, my heart has filled with joy the more. But to-day I thought to myself, 'I hope this Brahman will not take this jewel when he approaches!' When he took the jewel and carried it away with him, I was unable to retain my composure towards him."

The Teacher listened to his words and replied, "Lay disciple, are you not able to prevent others from taking what belongs to you?" And he taught him a way. The householder, employing the method taught him by the Teacher, saluted the Teacher and made the following Earnest Wish, "From this day forth, may it not be possible for kings or thieves, no matter how numerous, to defraud me of my property, though it be no more than a single thread. May my property never be burned by fire, and may it never be swept away by water." The Teacher said, "So be it," and pronounced the words of thanksgiving.

When the householder celebrated the opening of the Perfumed Chamber, he entertained sixty-eight hundred thousand monks within the monastery for nine months and presented them with abundant offerings. In conclusion he presented each monk with a set of three robes, the cloths for the robes of a novice of the Order being worth a thousand pieces of money. Having thus performed works of merit during the term of life allotted to him, he passed out of this state of existence and was reborn in the World of the Gods. After passing through the round of birth and rebirth in the Worlds of the Gods and the world of men during all this time, [207] he obtained a new conception in the dispensation of the present Buddha at Rājagaha in the family of a certain treasurer. For the space of nine and a half lunar months he abode in the womb of his mother.

33 b. Story of the Present: Treasurer Jotika

Now on the day of his birth, all the weapons in the whole city flashed fire, and all the jewels worn by the inhabitants on their persons flashed light as though they were on fire, so that the city was one blaze of light. When the treasurer, very early in the morning, went to wait upon the king, the king asked him, "To-day all the weapons have flashed fire and the whole city is one mass of light; do you know of any reason for this?" "Yes, your majesty, I know the reason for it." "What is it, treasurer?" "A slave of yours was born to-day in my house. This miracle has taken place solely by the power of his merit." "Will he perhaps turn out to be a robber?" "No such thing, your majesty; the being that was born to-day possesses a vast store of merit as the fruit of an Earnest Wish." "In this case he ought to be brought up properly; let this be spent to buy milk for him." So saying, the king agreed to provide a thousand pieces of money daily to buy milk for the boy. When the day came for him to be given a name, they gave him the name Jotika, inasmuch as the whole city had been one blaze of light (pajjota) on the day of his birth.

Now when he had reached the proper age for marriage and a plot of ground was being cleared for the purpose of erecting a house for him, the Abode of Sakka showed signs of heat. Sakka considered within himself, "What can this mean?" and straightway became aware of the following, "They are preparing the site for the house of Jotika." Sakka thought to himself, "This youth will never live in a house built by these men; it is my duty to go to him." So in the guise of a carpenter he went to the site of the house and asked the men, "What are you doing?" "We are preparing the site for the house of Jotika." "Begone; he will not live in any house that you can build."

So saying, [208] Sakka but looked upon a plot of ground sixteen karisas in extent. Instantly that plot of ground became as smooth and even as a kasina-disk. Again the second time he looked, thinking as he looked, "May the earth be rent asunder in this place and may there arise here a splendid palace seven stories high, made entirely of the seven precious minerals." Instantly just such a palace arose. Again the third time he looked, thinking as he looked, "May seven walls arise and encircle this palace." Instantly just such walls arose. Again he looked, thinking as he looked, "May wishing-trees spring up in a circle about these walls." Instantly just such wishing-trees sprang up. Once more he looked, thinking as he looked, "May four urns of treasure arise at the four corners of the palace." Instantly four urns of treasure arose at and beneath the four corners of the palace.

Now of these four urns of treasure, one was a league in measure,

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

the rice was cooked, the crystals would go out; by this sign they knew that the rice was cooked. Whenever they desired to prepare sauces and curries and the like, they would follow the same method. Thus all of their food was cooked with these burning-glasses. And they lived by the light of the precious stones, [210] and knew not the light of fire or lamp.

The report spread all over the Land of the Rose-apple that Treasurer Jotika was possessed of splendor and wealth; and multitudes of people harnessed wagons and other conveyances and drew near to see. Treasurer Jotika caused porridge to be prepared from the rice brought from Uttarakuru, and provided all of his visitors with plenty to eat. And he issued the following order, "Let them take garments from the wishing-trees and jewels from the wishing-trees." And causing the quarter-league urns of treasure to be opened, he issued the following order, "Let them take so much treasure as they need to support life."

Now although all the inhabitants of the Land of the Rose-apple carried much treasure away with them, after they had gone the treasure contained in the urn had not been lowered a finger's breadth. We are told that this was the result of Jotika's sanding the apartment of the Perfumed Chamber with scattered jewels. So numerous were the multitudes that flocked to Jotika's palace, departing with garments and jewels and money, as much as they desired, that so long as they flocked thither, even King Bimbisāra, who greatly desired to see the palace, had no opportunity.

Later on, because the majority of the people had departed with as much as they wished, the numbers diminished. Then King Bimbisāra said to Jotika's father, "I should like to see your son's palace." "Very well, your majesty," replied Jotika's father. So he went to his son and said, "Son, the king would like to see your palace." Jotika replied, "Very well, father; let him come." So the king went there with a large retinue. Now there stood at the first gate a female slave, whose duty was to sweep and remove the refuse; and when she saw the king approach, she gave him her hand. But the king, taking the woman for a wife of the treasurer, refrained out of modesty from placing his hand on her arm. Likewise at each of the remaining gates [211] stood slave-women who offered the king their hands; but the king, believing them to be wives of the treasurer, refrained from placing his hand on their arms.

Jotika came forth, and advancing to meet the king, saluted him, and taking his place behind the king, said to him, "Go forward, your majesty." But to the king the jeweled ground appeared to be an abyss of jewels as deep as the height of a hundred men. He thought, "This man has dug a pit to trap me," and did not dare to plant his foot down. So Jotika went ahead of him, saying, "Your majesty, there is no pit here; walk behind me." Then the king, walking in Jotika's footsteps, trod firmly on the ground, and walked round and round the palace, gazing at it from the lowest story to the highest.

Now at that time Ajātasattu Kumāra also accompanied his father about the palace, holding his father's finger, and as he walked round and round the palace, he thought to himself, "What an utter simpleton my father is! This Jotika, although he is a mere householder, dwells in a palace made entirely of the seven precious minerals. But my father, although he is a king, dwells in a house of wood. I will straightway become king. But not for a moment after I have become king will I permit this householder to dwell in this palace."

When the king reached the topmost story of the palace, it was already time for breakfast. Accordingly the king addressed the treasurer, saying, "Great treasurer, let us eat our breakfast right here." The treasurer replied, "Yes, your majesty, that is my plan; the food is all prepared for your majesty." So the king bathed in sixteen pitcherfuls of perfumed water; and having so done, seated himself on the couch prepared expressly for Jotika, under the treasurer's jeweled pavilion.

Thereupon servants offered him water with which to wash his hands, and heaping moist rice-porridge in a golden dish worth a hundred thousand pieces of money, set it before him. The king, taking it for food, began to eat. The treasurer, however, said to him, "Your majesty, this is not food; [212] this is moist rice-porridge." Then the servants heaped food in another golden dish and put it in the first dish. In this way, we are told, this latter food made delicious eating the moment it was served. The king began to eat the savory food, but did not know when he had had enough.

Thereupon the treasurer saluted the king and extending his clasped hands in an attitude of reverent supplication, said, "That is enough, your majesty; pray let that suffice; if you eat any more, it will be impossible for you to digest it." Said the king to the treasurer, "Householder, why do you cast reproach on your own food?" The treasurer replied, "Your majesty, I do not mean to reproach you. For I am giving all of your soldiers also the very same porridge and the very same curry I am giving you. Nevertheless, I fear for your majesty.” “Why?” “In case your majesty should become inactive, people would say, ‘The king ate food yesterday in the treasurer’s house; the treasurer must have done something to it.’ I fear such talk, your majesty.” “Very well,” said the king, “remove the food and bring water.” When the king had finished his meal, all the king’s retinue partook of the same kind of food.

As the king sat engaged in pleasant conversation with the treasurer, he said to him, “Treasurer, have you no wife living in this house?” “Yes, your majesty, I have.” “Where is she?” “Reclining in the royal apartment; she does not know that your majesty has arrived.” (Although the king arrived early in the morning with his retinue, yet the treasurer’s wife did not so much as know that he had arrived.) Thereupon the treasurer thought, “The king evidently desires to see my wife.” So he went to her apartment and said, “The king has arrived; is it not your duty to see the king?” [213]

His wife, without stirring from where she lay, replied merely, “Husband, who is this person you call ‘king’?” “The king, our sovereign.” Thereupon his wife, to show her displeasure, said, “The deeds of merit we have done must partake of the nature of sins if we have a sovereign over us. It must be that we wrought works of merit without faith, and attained this glory, to be reborn subjects of another. Without doubt we must have given alms without faith, and this is the fruit of it.” Having thus shown her displeasure, she said, “Husband, what shall I do now?” “Take this palmyra fan and go fan the king.” So she took the palmyra fan and went and fanned the king.

As she was fanning the king, the scent of the perfume with which the king’s robe was perfumed irritated her eyes, and forthwith a flood of tears streamed from her eyes. When the king observed this, he said to the treasurer, “Great treasurer, womankind possesses but little intelligence. Doubtless your wife thinks, ‘The king may rob my husband of his wealth,’ and is weeping for fear. Quiet her fears. I have no desire for your wealth.” The treasurer made answer to the king, “Your majesty, my wife is not weeping.” “What is the matter, then?” “The scent of the perfume with which your robe is perfumed is so strong that it brings tears to her eyes. Indeed my wife has never seen the light of a lamp or the light of a fire; she eats and sits and reclines solely by the light of jewels. Your majesty, however, must have sat by the light of a lamp.” “Yes, treasurer.” “Well then, your majesty, from to-day henceforth, sit by the light of a jewel.” So saying, the

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Now the woman who received the child was a supporter of the Elder Mahā Kaccāna. And she brought up the child with this thought in mind, "I will have this child enter the Order under the auspices of the Elder." Now on the day of the child's birth, when he was bathed for the purpose of washing off the birth-stains, his hair became matted, and therefore they gave him the name Jaṭila. One day when the child was old enough to walk, the Elder entered that house for alms. The female lay disciple provided the Elder with a seat and offered him food. When the Elder saw the boy, he asked, "Lay disciple, you have a boy?" "Yes, Reverend Sir, I am bringing him up with this thought in mind, 'I will have this child enter the Order under your auspices.' Therefore pray admit him to the Order." "Very well," replied the Elder. And taking the boy with him, he departed.

As the Elder proceeded on his way, he considered within himself, "Has this boy a sufficient store of merit to enable him to attain the station of a wealthy householder?" Straightway he became aware of the following, "This boy is a person of great merit, and will some day enjoy great wealth. As yet, however, he is a mere child, as yet he lacks maturity of knowledge." Therefore the Elder took the boy with him to Takkasilā, and stopped at the house of a certain lay supporter of his. The layman saluted the Elder, and seeing the boy, asked, "Reverend Sir, you have a boy?" "Yes, lay disciple, and he will enter the Order; but as yet he is a mere child. Let him remain with you for a time." "Very well," replied the layman, and cared for the boy tenderly, treating him as his own son.

Now for twelve years goods had been accumulating in the layman's house. One day, when the layman was about to set out on a journey to the next village, [216] he removed all of his goods to a shop, and seating the boy in the shop, told him the price of each piece of goods. "This and that are worth such and such," said the layman; "if you can get such and such for them, sell them." So saying, the layman departed.

That day the guardian divinities of the city directed towards his very shop all that had need of even so little as pepper and cummin-seed. The result was that in a single day he sold all the goods that had been accumulating for twelve years. When the householder returned and saw nothing at all left in the shop, he said to the youth, "My dear boy, have you lost all your goods?" The youth replied, "I have lost nothing. All that you left with me I have sold in accordance with your directions. Here is the price for such and such, and here is the price for such and such."

The householder was overjoyed. "Here," he exclaimed, "is a man whose worth is beyond price, a man who is able to make his living wherever he may be!" Now his own daughter had just reached marriageable age. So he straightway gave him his daughter in marriage, ordered his men to build a house for him, and when the house was completed, said to him, "Go take up your residence in your own house." Now when Jaṭila entered his house, no sooner had he set one foot on the threshold than the earth in the rear of his house was rent asunder and there arose a mountain of gold eighty cubits in height. When the king heard that a mountain of gold had arisen in the rear of Jaṭila's house, rending the earth asunder, he sent him a treasurer's parasol. Thereafter he was known as Treasurer Jaṭila.

Treasurer Jaṭila had three sons. When they had reached manhood, he conceived a desire to retire from the world and become a monk. And he thought to himself, "If there is a treasurer's family possessed of wealth equal to ours, they will permit me to retire from the world; otherwise they will not give me their permission." Accordingly he determined to find out. So he had made a golden brick and a golden whip and a golden cord; and placing them in the hands of his men, said to them, "Take these with you and travel throughout the Land of the Rose-apple, pretending to be looking for nothing in particular, [217] and find out whether or not there is a treasurer's family possessed of wealth equal to ours; having so done, return to me." Jaṭila's men traveled from place to place until they reached the city of Bhaddiya.

Now in the city of Bhaddiya lived Treasurer Ram, Mendaka;¹ and when he saw those men, he asked them, "Friends, on what errand are you traveling about?" "We are traveling about looking for nothing in particular." Treasurer Ram perceived within himself, "It cannot be true that these men are traveling about from place to place, with things such as these in their hands, looking for nothing in particular; they are traveling about exploring the country." So he said to them, "Go into the yard behind our house and take a look." Jaṭila's men went into the yard.

There, in a space eight karīśas in extent, they saw golden rams of the sort previously described, as big as elephants or horses or bulls, prancing about, striking back with back, and cleaving the earth asunder. Jaṭila's men strolled about among the rams and then came out. Treasurer Ram asked them, "Friends, did you find what you were traveling about looking for?" "Yes, master, we found what we were looking for." "Well then, depart." So saying, he dismissed them. Jaṭila's men returned home.

¹ For the story of Treasurer Ram, see xviii. 10.

The treasurer their master asked them, "Friends, did you see a treasurer's household possessed of wealth equal to ours?" The men replied, "Master, what wealth do you possess! Treasurer Ram, who lives in the city of Bhaddiya, possesses wealth as great as all this!" So saying, they told him all about what they had seen.

When the treasurer heard their story, he was delighted. "I have found one such treasurer's family," thought he; "is there perhaps another?" So giving his men a blanket worth a hundred thousand pieces of money, he said to them, "Friends, go find out whether there is another such treasurer's family." So saying, he sent them forth. Jaṭila's men went to the city of Rājagaha, made a pile of wood near Treasurer Jotika's house, and set fire to it. "What are you doing?" they were asked. Jaṭila's men replied, "We have here a very valuable blanket and have been trying to sell it. But we can find no buyer, and are afraid that if we carry it about with us, we shall be attacked by robbers. As soon, therefore, as we have burnt it in this fire, we shall continue our journey."

Now Treasurer Jotika saw them and asked his men, "What are these men doing?" When he heard what they were doing, he caused them to be summoned and asked them, "How much is the blanket worth?" "It is worth a hundred thousand pieces of money." [218] Jotika ordered a hundred thousand pieces of money given to the men, and placing the blanket in their hands, sent them forth, saying to them, "Give the blanket to the slave-woman whose duty is to sweep the gate-house and remove the refuse."

When the slave-woman received the blanket, she burst into tears, went to her master, and said, "Master, if I have been guilty of any offense, should I not be beaten for it? Why did you send me such a coarse blanket as this? How can I wear it either as an undergarment or a cloak?" Jotika replied, "It was not for that purpose that I sent you the blanket. I sent it to you simply that you might roll it up and lay it at the foot of your bed; so that, after bathing your feet in perfumed water, you might have a blanket to wipe them with. Can you not make such use as this of the blanket?" "Yes,"

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

place where the shrine was being erected, and looking at the shrine, asked the following question, "Friends, why is it that the north façade of the shrine is still unfinished?" "There is not enough gold," replied the builders. Said the Arahāt, "I will enter the village and urge the people to give; devote your best attentions to the work." So saying, the Arahāt entered the city and cried out, "Men and women, there is not enough gold to finish the north façade of your shrine. Contribute gold for this purpose." Having thus prevailed upon the multitude to contribute gold for the shrine, he went to the house of a goldsmith.

Now just at this moment the goldsmith was sitting in his house engaged in a quarrel with his wife. Said the Elder to the goldsmith, "There is not enough gold to finish the north façade of the shrine which you have undertaken to build; this is something which you ought to know." But so angry was the goldsmith toward his wife that he replied, "Throw your Teacher into the water and go your way." Thereupon the goldsmith's wife said to her husband, "You have done a most wicked thing. If you are so angry with me as all that, you ought to be satisfied to rebuke me or beat me. Why should you vent your spleen on the Buddhas, past, present, and to come?"

Instantly the goldsmith [220] was overcome with remorse. Flinging himself at the Elder's feet, he said, "Pardon me, Reverend Sir." The Elder replied, "It was not I to whom you spoke; ask pardon of the Teacher." Said the goldsmith, "Reverend Sir, what must I do to obtain the pardon of the Teacher?" The Elder replied, "Friend, make three jars of golden flowers and place them in the repository of the relics; then wet your garments and the hair of your head, and ask the Teacher's pardon." "Very well, Reverend Sir," said the goldsmith.

While the goldsmith was making the golden flowers, he summoned the oldest of his three sons, saying to him, "Come, son, I spoke harshly of the Teacher. Therefore, so soon as I have finished these golden flowers, I shall place them in the repository of the relics and shall ask pardon of the Teacher. I wish you to accompany me." But the oldest son was unwilling to go and replied, "It was not I that made you speak harshly. You go alone." Then the goldsmith summoned his second son and said the same thing to him, but the second son likewise refused to go, making the same answer. Finally the goldsmith summoned his youngest son. Said the youngest son, "It is a son's duty to do whatever there is to be done." So he agreed to accompany his father, and assisted his father in making the flowers. When the goldsmith had completed three jars of flowers, measuring a span in breadth, he placed them in the repository of the relics, and wetting his garments and the hair of his head, asked pardon of the Teacher.

33 e. Story of the Present concluded

For this reason, in seven successive states of existence, Jaṭila was thrown into the water on the day of his birth; and since this was the last of the seven states of existence, in this state of existence also, as the result of that evil deed, he was thrown into the water. Now inasmuch as the two brothers who were his oldest sons were not willing to assist him in making the golden flowers, the mountain of gold did not come into existence for them; but since the youngest son assisted his father, the mountain of gold came into existence solely for the father and the youngest son. [221] Treasurer Jaṭila, having thus admonished his sons, retired from the world, became a monk under the Teacher, and in but a few days attained Arahatsip.

Some time afterwards the Teacher accompanied by five hundred monks, while making a pilgrimage for alms, stopped at the door of the house of Jaṭila's sons. And for the space of half a month Jaṭila's sons served the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha with food. In the evening, when the monks were assembled in the Hall of Truth, they began the following discussion, "Brother Jaṭila, did you experience to-day no longing for the mountain of gold eighty cubits high and for your sons?" "No, brethren," replied Jaṭila, "I experienced neither longing for them nor pride in them." Then said the monks, "This Elder Jaṭila utters what is not true and is guilty of falsehood." The Teacher, hearing their talk, said, "Monks, it is quite true that my son has no longing for them or pride in them." So saying, he expounded the Law by pronouncing the following Stanza,

416. Whoever in this world has abandoned Craving,
 Whoever has gone forth from the household life to the houseless life,
 Whoever has destroyed the essence of Craving, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 34. AJĀTASATTU ATTACKS JOTIKA'S PALACE ¹

Whoever in this world has abandoned Craving. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to the Elder Jotika.

For after Ajātasattu Kumāra had conspired with Devadatta and killed his father, Bimbisāra, and become established in the kingdom, he said to himself, [222] “I will now take the great palace of Treasurer Jotika;” and arming himself for battle, he sallied forth. But seeing his own reflection and that of his retinue in the jeweled walls, he concluded, “The householder has armed himself for battle and has come forth with his host.” Therefore he did not dare approach the palace.

Now it happened that on that day the treasurer had taken upon himself the obligations of Fast-day, and early in the morning, immediately after breakfast, had gone to the monastery and sat listening as the Teacher preached the Law. When, therefore, the Yakkha Yamakoli, who stood guard over the first gate, saw Ajātasattu Kumāra, he called out, “Where are you going?” And straightway putting Ajātasattu Kumāra and his retinue to rout, he pursued them in all directions. The king sought refuge in the very same monastery as that to which the treasurer had gone. When the treasurer saw the king, he rose from his seat and said, “Your majesty, what is the matter?” Said the king, “Householder, how comes it that after giving orders to your men to fight with me, you are sitting here pretending to be listening to the Law?”

Said the treasurer, “But, your majesty, did you set out with the idea of taking my house?” “Yes, for that very purpose did I set out.” “Your majesty, a thousand kings could not take my house from me against my will.” Upon this Ajātasattu became angry and said, “But, do you intend to become king?” “No,” replied the treasurer, “I do not intend to become king. But neither kings nor robbers could take from me against my will the tiniest thread.” “Then may I take the house with your consent?” “Well, your majesty, I have here on my ten fingers twenty rings. I will not give them to you. Take them if you can.” [223]

The king crouched on the ground and leaped into the air, rising to

¹ Text: N iv. 221-224.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

was entering the village for alms, in company with the Congregation of Monks presided over by the Buddha, the monks saw a certain mime going through his performance. Thereupon they asked the monk who was once a mime, "Brother, yonder mime is going through the same kind of performance you used to go through; have you no longing for this sort of life?" "No, brethren," replied the monk. The monks said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, this monk utters what is not true, is guilty of falsehood." When the Teacher heard them say this, he replied, "Monks, my son has passed beyond all bonds." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

417. He that has cast off the bondage of things of earth,
He that has escaped from the bondage of things of heaven,
He that has thrown off every bond, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 36. THE MONK WHO WAS ONCE A MIME ¹

He that has cast aside both pleasure and pain. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to a certain monk who was once a mime. [225]

The story is the same as the foregoing, except that on this occasion the Teacher said, "Monks, my son has put aside both pleasure and pain," and so saying, pronounced the following Stanza,

418. He that has cast aside both pleasure and pain, he that is cold, free from passion,
He that, strenuous, has overcome all the worlds, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 37. THE SKULL-TAPPER ²

He that knows the passing away. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Vaṅḡisa. [226].

It seems that there lived at Rājagaha a Brahman named Vaṅḡisa who could tell in which of the states of existence men were reborn at death. He would rap on their skulls and say, "This is the skull of a man who has been reborn in Hell; this man has been reborn as an animal; this man has been reborn as a ghost; this is the skull of a man who has been reborn in the world of men."

¹ Text: N iv. 225.

² From this story are derived Thera-Gāthā Commentary, cclxiv (Story of Vaṅḡisa), and cli (Story of Migasira). Cf. Aṅguttara Commentary on Etadagga Vagga, Story of Vaṅḡisa. For a Sanskrit parallel from Eastern Turkestan, see A. F. R. Hoernle, JRAS., 1916, 709 ff. (fifth fragment). Cf. Story xxvi. 30 b. Text: N iv. 226-228.

The Brahmans thought to themselves, "We can use this man to prey upon the world." So clothing him in two red robes, they took him about the country with them, saying to everyone they met, "This Brahman Vaṅḡisa can tell by rapping on the skulls of dead men in which of the states of existence they have been reborn; ask him to tell you in which of the states of existence your own kinsmen have been reborn." People would give him ten pieces of money or twenty or a hundred according to their several means, and would ask him in which of the states of existence their kinsmen had been reborn.

After traveling from place to place, they finally reached Sāvatti and took up their abode near the Jetavana. After breakfast they saw throngs of people going with perfumes, garlands, and the like in their hands to hear the Law. "Where are you going?" they asked. "To the monastery to hear the Law," was the reply. "What will you gain by going there?" asked the Brahmans; "there is nobody like our fellow-Brahman Vaṅḡisa. He can tell by rapping on the skulls of dead men in which of the states of existence they have been reborn. Just ask him in which of the states of existence your own kinsmen have been reborn." [227] "What does Vaṅḡisa know!" replied the disciples, "there is no one like our Teacher." But the Brahmans retorted, "There is no one like Vaṅḡisa," and the dispute waxed hot. Finally the disciples said, "Come now, let us go find out which of the two knows the more, your Vaṅḡisa or our Teacher." So taking the Brahmans with them, they went to the monastery.

The Teacher, knowing that they were on their way, procured and placed in a row five skulls, one each of men who had been reborn in the four states of existence: Hell, the animal world, the world of men, and the World of the Gods; and one skull belonging to a man who had attained Arahatsip. When they arrived, he asked Vaṅḡisa, "Are you the man of whom it is said that by rapping on the skulls of dead men you can tell in which of the states of existence they have been reborn?" "Yes," said Vaṅḡisa. "Then whose is this skull?" Vaṅḡisa rapped on the skull and said, "This is the skull of a man who has been reborn in Hell." "Good! good!" exclaimed the Teacher, applauding him. Then the Teacher asked him about the next three skulls, and Vaṅḡisa answered without making a mistake. The Teacher applauded him for each answer he gave and finally showed him the fifth skull. "Whose skull is this?" he asked. Vaṅḡisa rapped on the fifth skull as he had on the others, but confessed that he did not know in which of the states of existence the man had been reborn.

Then said the Teacher, "Vaṅḡisa, don't you know?" "No," replied Vaṅḡisa, "I don't know." "I know," said the Teacher. Thereupon Vaṅḡisa asked him, "Teach me this charm." "I cannot teach it to one who is not a monk." Thought the Brahman to himself, "If I only knew this charm, I should be the foremost man in all India." Accordingly he dismissed his fellow-Brahmans, saying, "Remain right here for a few days; I intend to become a monk." And he became a monk in the name of the Teacher, was admitted a full member of the Order, and was thereafter known as Elder Vaṅḡisa.

They gave him as his Subject of Meditation the Thirty-two Constituent Parts of the Body and said to him, "Repeat the preliminary words of the formula." He followed their instructions and repeated the preliminary words of the formula. [228] From time to time the Brahmans would ask him, "Have you learned the formula?" and the Elder would answer, "Just wait a little! I am learning it." In but a few days he attained Arahatsip. When the Brahmans asked him again, he replied, "Brethren, I am now unable to learn it." When the monks heard his reply, they said to the Teacher, "Reverend Sir, this monk utters what is not true and is guilty of falsehood." The Teacher replied, "Monks, say not so. Monks, my son now knows all about the passing away and rebirth of beings." So saying, he pronounced the following Stanzas,

419. He that knows the passing away and rebirth of beings everywhere,
He that is free from attachment, happy, and enlightened, such a man I call a Brahman.
420. He whose future estate is not known to gods or Gandhabbas or men,
He who has destroyed the evil passions and has attained Arahatsip, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 38. HUSBAND AND WIFE ¹

He that possesses naught. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Veluvana with reference to the nun Dhammadinnā. [229]

¹ Parallels: Aṅguttara Commentary, JRAS., 1893, 560-566; Therī-Gāthā Commentary, xii:15-16. Cf. Majjhima, 44: i. 299-305. Text: N iv. 229-231.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

of questioning, the lay disciple asked about the remaining Paths also. He did not stop, however, at this point, but continuing his questions, asked her about Arahatsip. “Wonderful, brother Visākha!” exclaimed Dhammadinnā. “But if you desire to know about Arahatsip, you should approach the Teacher and ask him this question.”

Visākha saluted the nun his former wife, and rising from his seat and going to the Teacher, repeated to the Exalted One their talk and conversation. Said the Teacher, “What my daughter Dhammadinnā said was well said. In answering this question I also should answer it as follows.” And expounding the Law, he pronounced the following Stanza,

421. He that possesses naught in the present, the past, and the future,
He that neither possesses aught nor yearns for aught, such a man I call a Brahman.

XXVI. 39. AÑGULIMĀLA THE FEARLESS ¹

The noble. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to Elder Aṅgulimāla. [231]

This story is related in the Commentary on the Stanza beginning “The niggardly go not to the World of the Gods.” For it is there said:

The monks asked Aṅgulimāla, “Brother Aṅgulimāla, were you not afraid when you saw the rogue elephant standing before you holding a parasol?” “No, brethren, I was not afraid.” The monks said to the Teacher, “Reverend Sir, Aṅgulimāla utters falsehood.” The Teacher replied, “Monks, my son Aṅgulimāla has no fear. For monks like my son are of all the Noble ones who have rid themselves of the Depravities the noblest, and have no fear.” So saying, he pronounced the following Stanza,

422. The noble, the eminent, the manly, the wise, the conqueror,
The pure, the sinless, the enlightened, him I call a Brahman.

¹ Cf. Story xiii. 10 (text: iii. 187). For the story of the conversion of the robber Aṅgulimāla, see Story xiii. 6 (Majjhima, 86). Text: N iv. 231–232.

XXVI. 40. IT IS THE GIVER THAT MAKES THE GIFT ¹

He that knows his former abodes. This religious instruction was given by the Teacher while he was in residence at Jetavana with reference to a question asked by Brahman Devahita. [232]

For once upon a time the Exalted One suffered from disorder of the humors and sent Elder Upavāṇa to Brahman Devahita for hot water. The Elder went to the Brahman, told him the Teacher was suffering from disorder of the humors, and asked him for hot water. When the Brahman heard the Teacher's request, his heart was filled with joy. "How fortunate for me," he exclaimed, "that the Supreme Buddha should send to me for hot water!" The Brahman gave the Elder hot water and a jar of molasses, ordering one of his men to carry the hot water on a pingo. The Elder caused the Teacher to bathe himself in hot water, and then, mixing the molasses with hot water, gave it to the Exalted One to drink. The Teacher's ailment immediately abated.

The Brahman [233] thought to himself, "To whom should one give alms to obtain a great reward? I will ask the Teacher." So he went to the Teacher and asked him about the matter, pronouncing the following Stanza,

To whom shall one give alms? To whom must alms be given to get a great reward?
How, for the giver, does the reward become a great one?

Said the Teacher to the Brahman, "The alms of such a Brahman as this yield abundant fruit." And proclaiming his conception of the true Brahman, he pronounced the following Stanza,

423. He that knows his former abodes, he that beholds heaven and hell,
He that has reached the end of birth and rebirth, the sage in whom Higher
Knowledge has been perfected,
That man in whom all the Perfections have been perfected, such a man I call a Brahman.

¹ This story is an abbreviated version of Samyutta, vii. 2. 3: i. 174-175. Text: N iv. 232-234.

Epilogue

The King of Righteousness attained the Dhammapada, the Incomparable [Nibbāna]. That Mighty Sage uttered the Stanzas of the Dhammapada.

Revealing the Four Truths, he uttered Stanzas four hundred three and twenty in number. There came into existence three hundred Stories less one.

Residing with grateful heart in the monastery erected by the monarch, in the palace of King Sirikūṭa,

I composed, in a series consisting of seventy-two portions for recitation, this faultless Commentary on the Stanzas,

In accordance with the spirit and letter of the Stanzas, based on the Good Law of the Protector of the World, for the weal and welfare of mankind.

By the merit which I earned thereby, may all the good desires of all living beings be fulfilled, producing sweet fruit.

Prosperity! Happiness! Health!

The Colophon is in three parts: (1) Enumeration of Stories; (2) Epilogue; (3) Ascription of Authorship to Buddhaghosa. The Ascription of Authorship is the usual formula found at the end of Buddhaghosa's genuine works, and the inclusion of it in the Colophon of this Commentary is without doubt the work of an uncritical scribe or redactor of later times. Cf. Introduction, § 5: HOS. 28. 26 f. Text of the Epilogue: N iv. 235.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

- Anamatagga saṃsāra, see Beginningless Round of Existences
- Anamatagga Saṃyutta (15), in part translated, 28.14 f.
- Ānanda, Brahman, assaults Uppalavaṇṇā, 29.128
- Ānanda, Elder, accompanies Buddha as attendant-monk, 29.121 f.
- expounds Law to Atula, 30.114
- to Mallikā and Vāsabhakhattiyā, 29.58
- inflicts "brahmadanda" on Channa, 29.166
- passes into Nibbāna in mid-air, 29.160 f.
- previous existences as woman, 29.25
- questions Buddha regarding perfumes, 29.84 f.
- risks life for Buddha, 28.236
- visits Buddha in Protected Forest, 28.180 ff.
- Pasenadi Kosala, 29.32 f.
- youth, 28.231 ff.
- Ānanda, miser, v.3: 29.115
- Anāthapiṇḍika, householder,
- almsgiving, 28.147, 242 f.; 29.32, 268 f.
- and goddess, ix.4: 29.268
- and laborer, 28.278 f.
- bribes son Kāla to earn merit, 30.29
- daughters of, minister to monks, 28.243; 30.184 ff.
- erects Jetavana monastery, 28.8, 146 f., 220
- favors Buddha needlessly, 28.147
- gives daughter Cullā Subhaddā in marriage, 28.243; 30.184 ff.
- "And hate not his father and mother," xii.4: 29.356
- Angels rejoice at Buddha's birth, 28.1
- Anger, cause of boils, 30.95 f.
- Kodha Vagga, Book 17, 30.95
- Āṅgulimāla, conversion of, 28.11, 13; xiii.6: 30.6
- fearlessness of, 30.25 f.; xxvi.39: 30.338
- Āṅgulimāla Sutta, translated, xiii.6: 30.6
- Āṅguttara Commentary, authorship, 28.48
- referred to by Jātaka Book, 28.49
- relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.49 ff.
- relation of Dhammapāla's Commentaries to, 28.49 f.
- Synoptical Table D 1, Commentaries on Āṅguttara, Dhammapada, and Therī-Gāthā, 28.49
- Synoptical Table D 2, Commentaries on Āṅguttara and Dhammapada, 28.50 f.
- Āṅguttara Nikāya, 28.25
- relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.45
- Animal stories, Introd. § 6 d: 28.42
- Animals, die of broken heart,
- dog, 28.255
- elephant, 28.182
- horse, 28.3
- Animals, killing of,
- forbidden, 28.18 f., 157, 284; 29.279; 30.245 ff.
- horror of, 28.18, note 1
- penalty for cow-killing, 29.143
- retribution for, 28.33, 225 ff.; 29.21 f., 110 f., 284 f., 286 ff.; 30.116 f.
- Anitthigandha Kumāra, xvi.5: 30.86
- Añjanasannibha, elephant, 30.246
- Āṅkura, deity, 30.49 f., 242
- Annabhāra, 28.231; 30.264 ff.
- and Sumana, xxv.12 a: 30.264
- Āññā-Koṇḍañña, 28.2, 197; i.8 c: 28.204
- Anojā, Queen, and King Kappina, vi.4 b: 29.169
- Anoma, Elder, 28.211, 213
- Anomā, river, 28.195
- Anomadassi, Buddha, 28.211 ff.
- Anotatta, lake, 28.173; 29.223; 30.51, 271 ff.
- Antelope and bait of honey, 30.312
- Anula, Elder, 30.220
- Anūpiya Mango Grove, 28.3
- Anupubba, Elder, 29.8 f.
- Anurādhapura, city, 30.220 f., 237
- Anuruddha, Elder, becomes a monk, 28.231 ff.; xxv.12 b: 30.267
- visits Kapilavatthu, 30.95
- waited on by goddess, vii.4: 29.201
- youth, 28.231 ff.; 30.264, 267 ff.
- Anutracārī, otter, 29.353 f.
- Aparājita, Nephew (Meṇḍaka), 30.316
- Aparājita, Uncle (Jotika), 30.315 ff.
- Apostasy, formula of, 29.119 f.
- Appamāda Vagga, Heedfulness, Book 2, 28.247
- Apparition of Buddha, 28.312, 325; 29.19,

- 217, 256, 260 f., 267, 335; 30.4, 163, 222, 252 f., 263
- Aputtaka, treasurer, xxiv.11: 30.239
- Arahanta Vagga, The Arahats, Book 7, 29.197
- Arahatship, attainment of,
at razor's edge, 28.248; 29.239; 30.270
by contemplating cloth, 28.303 f.; 29.317; 30.261 corpse, 28.186 f.
fire, 28.325; 29.260
flowers, 30.162 f., 259
mirage, 29.30; 30.4
water, 29.17, 30, 256; 30.4
definition of term, 28.7, 18
formula, 28.222 f.; 30.12
See Meditation, Hypnotic states, Trance
- Aravacchā, river, 29.172
- Are not Arahats creatures of flesh and blood? xxvi.18: 30.290
- Ariya, fisherman, xix.9: 30.146
- Arrow pierces 500 warriors, 29.40 f.
turns back, 28.286
- Asātarūpa Jātaka (100), 29.209, note 1, 214; 30.307, note 1
- Ascent of Buddha to heaven, xiv.2 e: 30.47
- Ascent of Ganges, xxi.1: 30.168
- Asita, Buddhist Simeon, 28.1 f.
- Āsivisopama Sutta, 30.221
- Assaji, Elder, 28.8, 200; 30.282
- Assajipunabbasuka monks, vi.2: 29.165
- Assemblages, three great, 30.173 f.
- Astringent, 29.197 f.
- Astrology, 28.250, 256; 30.132
- Asuras and Devas, conflict between, 28.319, 323 f.
- Atimuttaka, novice, 29.245 f.
- Atta Vagga, Self, Book 12, 29.349
- Attadattha, Elder, xii.10: 29.366
- Attainments, four, 29.323
- Aṭṭhasadda Jātaka (418), 29.100, note 1
- Aṭṭhissara, Private Buddha,
Devadatta in future existence, 28.240
- Atula, lay disciple, 30.113 f.
- Authorship of Dhammapada Commentary, 28.26 ff.; Introd. § 9: 28.59
- Authorship of Jātaka Book, 28.59 f.
- Authorship of Khuddaka Pāṭha Commentary, 28.51 f.
- Avaroja, Nephew (Mendaka), 30.130 f.
- Avaroja, Uncle (Jotika), 30.130 f.
- Avaruddhaka, ogre, 29.237
- Avīci hell, 28.29, 226 f., 240 f.; 29.106, 128, 136, 143, 216, 293, 303, 341; 30.22, 28, 117, 216
- Āviñjana-rajju, 29.187, 189, 326 f.
- Āyuvadḍhana Kumāra, viii.8: 29.235
- Babbu Jātaka (137), 29.190, note 1, 192
- Bad company mars manners, 30.251
- Baddheraka, elephant, 30.211
- Bāhiya Dārucīriya, conversion of, viii.2: 29.222 killed by heifer, 29.120, 226
- Bahubhāni (Kacchapa) Jātaka (215), xxv.3 a: 30.248
- Bahuputtikā and her ungrateful children, viii.14: 29.260
- Bāla Vagga, The Simpleton, Book 5, 29.100
- Bālanakkhattaghuṭṭha, ii.4: 28.310
- Baling out the ocean, 30.160
- Ball-playing, 30.179 f.
See also Marbles
- Bamboo Grove presented to Buddha, 28.8, 198
- Band of Five, 28.4, 6 f., 196; 29.144
- Band of Seventeen, 29.294 f.
- Band of Six, x. 1: 29.294; x.2: 29.294; xvii.8: 30.115; xix.2: 30.140
- Bandhanāgāra Jātaka (201), 30.223
- Bandhula, son of king of Mallas, divorces Mallikā, 29.39 killed by brigands, 29.41
slays Licchavi princes, 29.39 ff.
youth, 29.31 ff.
- Bandhumatī, king, father of Buddha Vipassī, 29.315
- Barber attempts life of king, 28.308
- Barrenness, 28.170 f.; 29.39
- "Basket of flowers," 30.43 ff., 274
- Bats reborn as deities, 30.52
- Bat-wing, fakir, 30.283
- Be not puffed up, xix.10: 30.147
- "Be ye doers of the word," xii.3: 29.354
- Beauties, five, 29.61 ff.
- Beautiful, water-pot of Sakka, 28.320
- Beauty is but skin-deep, xxiv.5: 30.225
See also xi.2: 29.330; xi.5: 29.336
- Bed-frame, 28.295 f.

Beginningless Round of Existences, Intro. § 2 a: 28.14; 28.17, 30, 151, 289; 29.160, 255, 314; 30.5, 18, 129
 Belaṭṭhisīsa, Elder, vii.3: 29.200
 Bell, monastery, 29.2 f., 240, 242
 Bereaved mother and pinch of mustard-seed, xx.11: 30.165
 See Kisā Gotamī, viii.13 b: 29.258
 Bestiality, 29.340
 Bhaddasāla Jātaka (465), 29.30, note 1
 Bhaddavaggiya monks, see Thirty noble youths
 Bhaddavati, elephant, 28.272
 Bhaddavatiya, treasurer, 28.266 ff.
 Bhaddiya, city, visited by Buddha, 29.59 f., 80
 Bhaddiya monks, xxi.3: 30.178
 Bhaddiya, prince, 28.231 ff.; 30.268
 Bhaddiya, treasurer's son, 29.79 f.
 Bhaddiya, see Lakunṭaka Bhaddiya
 Bhagu, Elder, 28.178, 231 ff.
 Bhallika and Tapussa, first converts, 28.5
 Bhattabhatika, laborer, 29.318 ff.
 Bhikkhu Vagga, The Monk, Book 25, 30.243
 Bhīmasena Jātaka (80), 30.126, note 1
 Bhokkanta, village, 30.221 f.
 Bibliography of Buddha and Buddhism, Intro. § 17: 28.68
 Big Wayman, 28.300 ff.; 30.299 f.
 Bilālapādaka, treasurer, ix.6: 29.272
 Bimbisāra, king of Rājagaha,
 conversion of, 28.7, 197
 escorts Buddha to Ganges, 30.170 offers Buddha his kingdom, 28.4, 195 presents Bamboo Grove to Buddha, 28.8, 198 presents Dhananījaya to Pasenadi Kosala, 29.60 f.
 questions Buddha regarding miracles, 30.39 rewards Kumbhaghosaka, 28.294 ff.
 visits Jotika's palace, 30.322 ff.
 Bird, magic, 29.349 f.
 Birds carry off human beings, 28.249; 29.253
 Birth amid rejoicing of angels, Intro. § 1 a: 28.1
 Birth and rebirth, knowledge of, 28.311 f.
 Blemishes, Mala Vagga, Book 18, 30.116
 Blockade of city, 29.216

Bloomfield, M., 28.70
 Bo-tree, 28.5
 Boa-constrictor ghost, x.6: 29.300
 Bodhi, prince, and magic bird, xii.1: 29.349
 Bow requiring 1000 men to string, 28.286; 29.39 f.
 Braggart, but of humble origin, 29.126 f.
 Brahmadata, king of Benāres, and ascetic Kesava, 29.34 ff.
 kills Dighati Kosala, 28.177
 Brahman, Brāhmaṇa Vagga, Book 26, 30.276
 Brahman, definition of term, 30.277 ff., 281, 283, 286 ff., 295 f., 299 ff., 307 f., 312, 331 ff.
 Brahman Great-Joy, xxvi.1: 30.276
 Brahman greets Buddha as son, xvii.5: 30.108
 Brahman Moonlight, xxvi.30 b: 30.305
 Brahman Saṃkha, xxi.1 a: 30.174
 Brahman who gave gifts of first-fruits, xxv.6: 30.252
 Brahman with a single robe, ix.1: 29.262
 Brāhmaṇa Vagga, The Brahman, Book 26, 30.276
 Brāhmaṇas, stories in, 28.26
 Brief list of books on the life and teachings of Buddha, Intro. § 17: 28.68
 Buddha, Gotama,
 abates quarrel between Sākiyas and Koliyas, 30.70 ff.
 accepts Jetavana, 28.8
 accepts Veluvana, 28.8, 198
 apparition of, see Apparition.
 ascends to heaven, xiv.2 e: 30.47
 author of Dhammapada, 28.145; 30.340 bibliography, Intro. § 17: 28.68 birth, Intro. § 1 a: 28.1
 comforts afflicted, 29.254 f., 259, 313 f.; 30.5, 18; xvi.2: 30.83; xvi.3: 30.84 conducts Nanda to World of Thirty-three, 28.221 cures monk of discontent, i.9 b: 28.220; xiv.5: 30.61 cures monk of love, xi.2: 29.330 cures Pasenadi Kosala of gluttony, 30.76 f., 206 date, 28.1
 death, 28.9

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Buddha, Gotama,
visits Kapila, 28.8; i.9: 28.217; xiii.2: 30.2
Rājagaha, 28.4, 7 f., 195, 197;
29.123 ff.
Revata, vii.9 b: 29.211
Setavya, 28.187 ff.
Verañjā, 29.193
Vesāli, xxi.1: 30.168
walks with Tissa the Forest-dweller,
29.159 ff.
youth and marriage, Introd. § 1 c:
28.2
Buddha Vagga, The Enlightened, Book
14, 30.31
Buddhaghosa,
author neither of Dh. cm. nor of Jā.
cm., 28.59 f.
author of Commentaries and Vis-uddhi Magga, 28.48 f., 51 f., 58 ff.
author of Khuddaka Pāṭha Commentary, 28.51 f.
Commentaries of, see Works
Practice of Meditation described by,
28.21
Visuddhi Magga, date, 28.48
Part 2, 28.21
Works of, date, 28.48, 58
enumerated, 28.48 f., 51 f., 58 ff.
relation of Dh. cm. to, Introd.
§ 7 d: 28.48
Buddhaghosha's Parables, Introd. § 14:
28.65
Buddhas, seven, 30.60
Buddhas shine both day and night,
xxvi.5: 30.278
Buddhas, twenty-four, 28.194
Buddhism, bibliography, Introd. § 17:
28.68
Buddhist-Christian parallels, Introd. § 1
i: 28.9
Buddhist Scriptures, date, 28.1, note 1 enumerated, 28.25
translations, 28.68 f.
Buddhist Simeon, Introd. § 1 b: 28.2
Burdens, two, 28.149, 244 f.; 29.238;
30.215
Buried treasure, 28.293 ff.
Burmese edition of text of Dh. cm., 28.67
parallels to Dh. cm. stories, 28.64
Burning-glasses, 30.321 f.

Burning-ground Practice, 28.185 ff.;
29.335
Burning of crow, ix.11 a: 29.286
of ox, ix.11 d: 29.289
By righteousness men honor Buddha, xii.10: 29.366; xv.7: 30.78; xxv.4:
30.249
Cakkhupāla, Elder, i.1: 28.146
Can a young monk be an "Elder"? xix.4:
30.142
Canda, prince, 29.309 ff.
Candābha, Brahman, xxvi.30 b: 30.305
Candābha, Elder, xxvi.30: 30.303
Candabhāgā, river, 29.171 f.
Canda Kinnara Jātaka (485), 28.218
Caṇḍālas, 29.115 f.
Candapadumā, wife of Treasurer Ram,
29.59; 30.130 ff.
Caṇḍa Pajjota, king of Ujjeni, captures Udena, 28.270 f.
wins five conveyances, 28.272 ff.
Cardinal Precepts, eight, 30.281
Virtues, five, 30.246
See also Five Precepts
Captive king and captor's daughter,
28.271 ff.
Catfoot, treasurer, ix.6: 29.272
Catholic doctrine and practice, 28.20 f.
Cattle refuse to trample child, 28.257 f.
Celakaṇṭhi, mare, 28.272
Celestial cakes, 28.231
chariots, 28.228
flavor, 28.212
mansion, 28.161 ff.
nymphs, 28.221, 320; 29.86, 266;
30.97
Chabbaggiya monks, x.1: 29.294; x.2:
29.294; xvii.8: 30.115; xix.2: 30.140
Change of sex, 29.24 ff.
Channa, charioteer of Buddha, 28.3, 195; 30.33
insolence of, vi.3: 29.166
Characteristics, three, 28.15, 18; 30.163
Chariots, celestial, 28.228
in single file, 29.40
Charm inadvertently recited, disperses robbers and saves king's life,
28.307 ff.
Charmed life borne by luck-child, 28.256 ff.
Charms, see Act of Truth, Elephant-charms

Chastity violated by monk, 28.250;
29.264 f.
by novice, 28.154
Chattapāṇi, lay disciple, iv.7: 29.56
Chief Disciples, i.8: 28.193
See also Sāriputta and Moggallāna
Childbirth, by the roadside, 28.300;
29.251 f.
eased by Act of Truth, 30.11 f.
eased by benediction, 30.308
in storm, 28.250; 29.251 f.
Childless, treasurer, xxiv.11: 30.239
Childlessness, 29.350 ff.; 30.239 ff.
Children visit the Buddha, xxii.9: 30.197
Child's query, "Have we no relatives?"
28.300; 29.37, 357
Chinese Tripiṭaka, printed from blocks in 972 A. D., 28.26
versions of Dhammapada, 28.26
Ciñcā falsely accuses Buddha, xiii.9:
30.19
Cingalese, Commentaries translated from,
28.59
editions of text of Dh. cm., 28.67
glosses on Dhammapada translated from, 28.27, 145
parallels to Dh. cm. stories, 28.64
Cintāmaṇī, wife of Gandha, 29.320
Citrā, seven-year-old novice, 30.43 f.
Circuit or circumambulation, ceremonial,
sunwise, 28.304; 29.101, 124, 229;
30.11
Citta and Sudhamma, v.14: 29.144;
xxi.7: 30.183
Citta Vagga, Thoughts, Book 3, 29.1
Cittahattha, Elder, iii.5: 29.12
Cittakūṭa, mountain, 30.248
City of the Thirty-three gods, 28.319
City treasurer and country treasurer,
ix.8 a: 29.280
Click of iron, 29.31
"Come, monks!" 28.7, 197, 202, 214, 280;
29.185, 211
Commentaries of Buddhaghosa, date, 28.48, 58
enumerated, 28.48, 51
relation of Dh. cm. to, Introd. § 7 d:
28.48
Jā. cm. to, 28.49
Visuddhi Magga to, 28.48
See Aṅguttara, Dīgha, Khuddaka
Pāṭha, Majjhima, Saṃyutta

Commentaries of Dhammapāla, date, 28.56, 58
enumerated, 28.56
relation to A. cm., 28.49 f., 56 f.
Dh. cm., 28.49 f.; Introd. § 7 f.:
28.56
See Petavatthu, Thera-Gāthā, Therī-
Gāthā, Vimānavatthu
Commentaries on Piṭakas, referred to,
30.157
Sutta Piṭaka, see Aṅguttara, Dīgha,
Dhammapada, Jātaka, Khuddaka
Pāṭha, Majjhima, Petavatthu,
Thera-Gāthā, Therī-Gāthā, Saṃ-yutta, Sutta Nipāta, Vimānavatthu
Vinaya Piṭaka, see Vinaya
Commentators, Hindu, literary methods of, 28.26; 29.100, note 1
Company of boys, x.3: 29.295
Company of over-confident monks, xi.4:
29.335
Conflict between Devas and Asuras,
28.319, 323 f.
Conjunction of constellation, 28.250, 256
Conversion of Bāhiya Dārucīriya, viii.2:
29.222
Conversion of pack of thieves, xxv.7:
30.254
Conversion of robber Finger-garland,
28.11, 13; xiii.6: 30.6
Conveyances, five, won by Caṇḍa Pajjota, 28.272 ff.
Copper-tooth, public executioner, viii.1:
29.218
Coral-tree, 28.320
Coughing, ejaculation upon, 30.288
Courtesy and rudeness, xviii.6: 30.124
Courtesan and four youths, v.7 a: 29.120 and Licchavi princes, 30.85 and thirty noble youths, 28.197; v.6: 29.118
casts away son, 28.256
Sirimā, death of, xi.2: 29.330 relations with Uttarā, xvii.3 b:
30.103
tempts monk, vii.10: 29.217; xxvi.32:
30.308
Courtezans save layman's life, xii.9:
29.365
Cow-festival, 28.253
Cow-killer and son, xviii.1: 30.116

- Cow-killing, fine for, 29.143
 Craving, Tanhā, 28.17 f., 30
 Craving, Tanhā Vagga, Book 24, 30.215
 Crow burned, ix.11 a: 29.286
 Crow-ghost, v.12 a: 29.138
 and snake-ghost, v.12: 29.137
 Crows and dogs huddle about child, 28.256
 Crows and Owls, story of, referred to, 28.174
 Cruel fowler, iii.7 a: 29.21
 Cruelty a cause of boils, iii.7: 29.20
 Culla Anāthapiṇḍika, feeds multitude, 30.49 gives alms daily to Buddha, 29.32 offers to perform miracle, 30.43
 Culla Dhammapāla Jātaka (358), 28.241
 Culla Dhanuggaha Jātaka (374), 30.231, note 1, 232
 Culla Dhanuggaha Paṇḍita, xxiv.7: 30.231
 Culla Ekasāṭaka, Brahman, ix.1: 29.262
 Culla Haṃsa Jātaka (533), 28.230, note 2, 236
 Culla Kāḷa (Aññā-Koṇḍañña) and Mahā Kāḷa, i.8 c: 28.204
 Culla Kāḷa and Mahā Kāḷa, merchants, i.6: 28.184
 Culla Kāḷa, lay disciple, xii.9: 29.365
 Culla Māgandiyā, uncle of Māgandiyā, 28.277, 288
 Culla Pāla, brother of Cakkhupāla, 28.146 ff.
 Culla Panthaka, ii.3: 28.299; 30.299 f.
 Culla Sāri, co-resident of Sāriputta, 30.124 f.
 Culla Setṭhi Jātaka (4), 28.51, note 1, 299, note 1, 309
 Cullā Subhaddā the virtuous, xxi.8: 30.184
 Culla Sumana, see Sumana, seven-year-old novice
 Cunda, novice, 30.44
 Cunda, pork-butcher, i.10: 28.225
 Cure for death, 29.258 f.
 discontent, 28.220 ff.; 29.249 disorder of humors, 30.339
 gluttony, 30.76 f., 206
 love, 29.330 ff.
 talkativeness, 29.142
 Curse and counter-curse, 28.168
 Curse, consequences of, avoided by trick, 28.169 f.
- "Cut-head," 30.1 f.
 Cycle of time, length of, 28.14
 Dabba the Malla, lights finger, 30.111 referred to, 29.223
 Dabbhapuppha Jātaka (400), 29.352, note 1
 Damiḷas, crushing of, 30.221
 Damsel-face, elephant, 30.251
 Dancers, 29.319 ff.
 See Nautch-girls
 Dancing dragons, 30.271
 Daṇḍa Vagga, The Rod or Punishment, Book 10, 29.294
 Dārusākaṭika-putta, xxi.5: 30.179
 Date of Buddha, 28.1
 Buddhaghosa, 28.48, 58
 Buddhist Scriptures, 28.1, note 1
 Dhammapada Commentary, Introd. § 8: 28.57
 Dhammapāla, 28.56, 58
 Jātaka Book, 28.1, note 1, 58
 Pasenadi Kosala, 28.58
 Visuddhi Magga, 28.48, 58
 Dattā, granddaughter of Visākhā, 30.84
 Daughter her father's senior, 28.243 f.
 Daughter of rich man falls in love with inferior, with hunter, 29.276 f.
 with slave, 28.299; 29.250
 with thief, 29.227
 David and Uriah motif, 29.100 ff.
 Death, Meditation on, 30.14 ff.
 Death of Moggallāna the Great, x.7: 29.304
 Death of Sāmāvatī and of Māgandiyā, ii.1.6: 28.277
 Death-penalty for crimes against parents, 30.203
 Death-warrant borne by self, 28.260 ff.
 Deer-park, near Benāres, 28.6
 Defeat of King of Kosala, xv.3: 30.73
 Degrees of nakedness, xxii.8: 30.196
 Delayed pursuit, 28.274
 Demerit, power of, 28.29 ff.
 Demoniacal possession, 28.273; 29.193, 329; 30.72, 208, 293
 Descent of Buddha from heaven, xiv.2 f.: 30.52
 Destroyer of friendships, xx.6 a: 30.154
 Devadatta, career of, i.12: 28.230
 conspires with Ajātasattu, 28.235 f.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Dhammika, lay disciple, i.11: 28.228
 Dhanañjaya, son of Treasurer Ram, 29.59 ff.; 30.130 ff.
 Dhanañjayanī, wife of Akkosa(ka) Bhāradvāja, 30.288 f.
 Dhanapāla, elephant, 30.205
 Dhutaṅgas, see Pure Practices
 Diarrhea, 28.262 f.; 30.79
 Did Big Wayman yield to anger? xxvi.24: 30.299
 Dīgha Commentary, authorship, 28.48
 Dīgha Nikāya, 28.25
 Kevaddha Sutta, in part translated, 28.15 f.
 relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.45
 Dīghakārāyaṇa, nephew of Bandhula, 29.42 f.
 Dīghati Kosala, killed by Brahmadata, 28.177
 Dīghavāpi, village, 30.220
 Dīghāvu, son of Dīghati, spares Brahmadata, 28.177
 Dīghāyu, Buddha, 29.296
 Dīghāyu, delivered from ogre, viii.8: 29.235
 Dinnā, queen, consort of Uggasena, confounds king of Benāres, v.1 b: 29.108 kills a ewe for food, v.1 c: 29.110
 Dīpaṅkara, Buddha, 28.194
 Discipline, Books of, see Vinaya student of, quarrels with preacher of Law, 28.176 ff.
 Discontent, 28.220 ff.; 29.9, 35, 247 ff., 264 f.; 30.61, 208, 261 cure for, 28.220 ff.; 29.249
 Discontented monk, iii.3: 29.8; viii.11 a: 29.249; ix. 2: 29.264
 Discrimination in almsgiving, importance of, 30.49 f., 242
 Disloyal children, daughters, viii.14: 29.260
 sons, xxiii.3: 30.201
 Disorder of humors, 28.278 f.; 30.339
 Distance shortened by magic, 28.156, 212 f.; 29.52 f., 80; 30.8, 47
 Divorce, 29.38 f., 190
 Divyāvadāna, parallels, 28.62 ff.
 Do not postpone until to-morrow, xx.5: 30.151
 Don't count your chickens before they're hatched, 29.11

Do trifling acts of merit lead to heaven? xvii.4: 30.107
 Dog, dies of broken heart, 28.255 drowned, ix.11 e: 29.289
 trained, 28.254 f.
 Dogs devour their own master, 29.282 f.
 Donkey, recalcitrant, 28.224
 Door-string, 29.187, 189, 326 f.
 Double of Buddha, 30.47
 of Sakka, 28.314
 Double, seeing, 29.340
 Dragons, 29.102 f.; 30.23, 56 ff., 172 ff., 271 ff.
 Dreams, ominous, 28.285 f.; 29.100, note 1
 Drowning of dog, ix.11 e: 29.289 of woman, ix.11 b: 29.287
 Drug, abortion-causing, 28.171
 Drunkenness, 28.37, 271, 319; 29.194, 292, 305, 312 f., 328 ff., 346 f.
 Duties, two, of disciples, 28.147 of monks, 28.149, 244 f.; 29.238; 30.215
 Duṭṭhagāmaṇī, king, 30.220
 Dve saḥāyakā bhikkhū, i.14: 28.244; ii.6: 28.312
 Dysentery, 28.262 f.; 30.79
 Earnest Wish, definition of term, 28.19 f.
 Earnest Wish, for Arahatsip, 28.204 ff.; 29.33, 151, 266; 30.230 f., 314 f.
 for beauty of person, 30.193, 225
 for Buddhahood, 28.20
 for Fruit of Conversion, 28.160; 30.101 for Preëminence, 28.210 f., 214 ff.; 29.82 ff., 127, 149, 167, 200, 254; 30, 264 for rebirth as ogress, 28.172; 29.120; 30.177 for rebirth with former husband, 29.47 for security of possessions, 30.319 f.
 for three Attainments, 30.314 f., 320 for various temporal blessings, 28.-273 f.; 29.149, 169, 199, 322; 30.-134 f.
 for wisdom, 29.65
 Earth-Kasina, 28.22 f.
 Eating with low-caste persons, 29.36 f., 45
 Editions of text of Dh. cm., Introd. § 16: 28.67

Edmunds, A. J., on Buddhist-Christian parallels, 28.9 ff.
 Egg-eating, 28.172, 180; 29.351 f.; 30.177
 Eight, Boons, 29.76
 Brahmans, 29.62 ff.
 Cardinal Precepts, 30.281
 Great Hells, 29.2
 sponsors for bride, 29.68 ff.
 Ticket-foods, 28.175; 29.331 f.
 Eightfold Gifts, 29.126, 264
 Eightfold Path, best of paths, xx.1: 30.149 to Nibbāna, Introd. § 2 e: 28.17 ff.
 Ejaculation, "Praise be to Buddha!"
 on sneezing, 30.288
 on throwing ball, 30.179
 See Meditation on Buddha
 Ekasāṭaka, see Mahā and Culla Ekasāṭaka
 Ekuddāna, Elder, xix.3: 30.141
 Elder Ānanda's question, iv.9: 29.84
 stanzas, xi.8: 29.345
 Elder Jaṭila, xxvi.33 c: 30.325
 Elder Meghiya, iii.1: 29.1
 Elder Moonlight, xxvi.30: 30.303
 Elder Nanda, i.9: 28.217
 Elder Revata of the acacia forest, vii.9: 29.209
 Elder Thought-controlled, iii.5: 29.12
 Elder who had attained Fruit of Third Path, xvi.8: 30.91
 Elephant, Añjanasannibha, of great merit, 30.246
 Baddheraka, sticks in mud, 30.211
 Bhaddavatī, fleet of foot, 28.272
 -charming lute, 28.248, 251 f., 270, 285
 -charms, 28.248, 251 f., 270 ff.
 Damsel-face, Mahilāmukha, xxv.5 a: 30.251
 Dhanapāla, homesick, 30.205
 dies of broken heart, 28.182
 Erāvaṇa, celestial, 28.318 ff.
 grateful, 29.164
 homesick, 30.205
 -hunter and noble elephant, i.7 a: 28.191
 Mahilāmukha, Damsel-face, xxv.5 a: 30.251 mechanical, 28.270
 Nālāgiri, subdued by Buddha, 28.236, 272

noble, 28.178 ff., 191 ff.; 30.211 ff.
 Pārileyyaka, waits upon Buddha, 28.178 ff.; 30.211
 Pāveyyaka, sticks in mud, 30.211
 Puṇḍarīka, white, 29.101
 refuses to trample virtuous, 28.316 f.
 state-elephant, 29.76 f., 101, 312 sticks fast in mud, xxiii.6: 30.211 trained, 28.178 ff., 236, 248, 251, 270, 272, 316 f., 318 ff.; 30.25, 200, 205, 211, 246, 251, 338
 -training, 30.200, 211
 unruly, 30.25, 251, 338
 waits upon Buddha, 28.178 ff.; xxiii.7: 30.211
 white, 28.270; 29.101, 164 wooden, filled with warriors, 28.270
 Enchanted hunter, ix.8: 29.276
 Enlightened, Buddha Vagga, Book 14, 30.31
 Enlightenment of Buddha, Introd. § 1 g: 28.4 ff.; 28.196
 Epilepsy, 30.208, 293
 Epilogue, 30.340
 Erakapatta, king of dragons, xiv.3: 30.56
 Erāvaṇa, elephant, 28.318 ff.
 Escheat, 28.264 f., 298; 29.183; 30.102, 239
 Etymologies, Hindu, worthlessness of, 28.28 of epithets of Sakka, 28.314
 Evil deeds, power of, 28.29 ff.
 Evil One, see Māra
 Evil, Pāpa Vagga, Book 9, 29.262
 Evil spirits, 28.153, 258; 29.18, 310 f.; 30.168, 171, 180
 See also Demoniacal possession, Māra, Ogre, Ogress
 Evil thoughts, three, 29.1
 Examination of conduct, 28.169, 307; 30.168 f., 294
 Excommunication, 28.176 f., 302; 29.356
 Eyes, affection of, 28.150 ff., 158

 Faith in Buddha, leads to rebirth in heaven, 28.160 ff., 180, 182
 Fakirs, bat-wing, 30.283
 skull-tapper, 30.334 ff.
 wind-eater, 29.133
 with radiance from navel, 30.305 f.
 Falling in love with a woman's voice, 28.154

False ascetic and king of lizards, xxvi.11 a: 30.284
 Famine, 28.252; 30.132, 168
 Fancied slight, vii.6: 29.203
 Farmer unjustly accused of theft, v.8: 29.121
 Fast-day, observance of, 28.278; 29.56 f., 300; 30.28 f., 332
 Father in that state where rebirth is no more, 30.106
 Father, uncle, and grandfather of Buddha in 500 existences, 30.108 ff.
 Fault-finding monk, xviii.11: 30.138
 novice, xviii.8: 30.126
 Fausböll, V., on authorship of Jātaka Book, 28.60 Festival, at Vesāli, 30.182
 cow-festival, 28.253
 Mountain-top, 28.189
 Public Day, 28.269; 29.62
 seven days', 28.310; 30.99 f.
 Feeding of five hundred, 28.11; 29.53
 "Few there be that find it," vi.10: 29.195
 Fine for cow-killing, 29.143
 for murder, 29.143
 Finger-garland, robber, conversion of, 28.11, 13; xiii.6: 30.6
 cows an unruly elephant, 30.25 f.; xxvi.39: 30.338 eases childbirth by Act of Truth, 30.11 f.
 Finger-rings, 30.332 f.
 Fire, as means of communication, 28.248
 -drill, 28.179
 meditation on, 29.128, 161, 315 f.; 30.65
 sacrificial, 29.234
 First-fruits, gift of, 28.204 f.; 30.139, 252
 First sermon of Buddha, 28.6, 196
 Fisherman and fish with stinking breath, xxiv.1 a: 30.217
 Five, Beauties, 29.61 ff.
 Cardinal Virtues, 30.246
 conveyances, 28.272
 Elements of Being, destruction of, 28.18
 Great Observations, 28.194 hundred, feeding of, 28.11; 29.53 hundred monks attain Insight, xiii.3: 30.4
 Monks, 28.4, 6 f., 196; 29.144
 Nikāyas, 28.25

 persons of great merit, 29.59 ff.
 persons of limitless wealth, 29.59 f.
 Precepts, 28.163 f., 206, 322 f.; 29.8, 85, 240, 311; 30.216, 246 symbols of royalty, 29.43
 Flashing of weapons and jewels, 30.319 f.
 Flowers, Puppha Vagga, Book 4, 29.29
 Flowers, rain of, 29.147, 149
 Footprint of Buddha, 28.275 f., 278; 30.32
 Footprints leading into water, 29.310
 Force of habit, xviii.9: 30.127; xxvi.25: 30.300
 Forester presents moon-disk, xxvi.30 a: 30.304
 Forgiveness of enemies, 28.174, 177
 Forgiveness of sins, none in Buddhism, 28.30
 "Former blood-relative," definition of term, 29.222 f.
 Fortify yourself like a city, xxii.7: 30.195
 Fortune-tellers, 29.239
 Forty, Subjects of Meditation, 28.21 f.
 wives of women, 30.311
 Four, adulterers, 29.106 f.
 Āgamas, 28.25; Introd. § 7 a: 28.45
 Attainments, 29.323
 causes of falling from World of Gods, 28.255 f.
 Great Kings, 28.16; 29.109, 135, 187, 189, 269, 325, 327; 30.236, 272
 Greater Nikāyas, 28.25; Introd. § 7 a: 28.45
 Inconceivables, 29.215, 322
 men killed by ogress in form of heifer, 29.120 ~ Noble Truths, 28.6 f., Introd. § 2 d: 28.16; 28.17 ff.
 novices, xxvi.23: 30.297
 Ominous Sights, 28.2, 195
 Ominous Sounds, 29.100, note 1, 103 ff.
 persons who should not run, 29.63 priceless gifts, 29.341; 30.26 standards of judgment, 29.336 f.
 States of Suffering, 28.30, 150; 29.55
 Trances, 28.21 ff.
 youths and courtesan, v.7 a: 29.120
 Fourfold Gifts, 29.264
 Free from attachment, vii.2: 29.198
 From vice to virtue, v.6: 29.118

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Great-Wealth, Bahudhana, treasurer, 30.102
 Mahādhana, merchant, ix.7: 29.274; xx.10: 30.164
 Mahādhana, treasurer, xi.9: 29.346
 Mahāsuvanna, householder, 28.146
 Greater and lesser gifts, xxiv.12: 30.242
 Greedy monk, xii.2: 29.352
 Guard doors of senses, xxv.1: 30.243
 Guardian of child, monk becomes, 30.326
 Guardian Yakkhas, seven, 30.321

Habit, force of, xviii.9: 30.127; xxvi.25: 30.300

Happiness, Sukha Vagga, Book 15, 30.70

Hardy, R. S., Legends of Gotama Buddha, Manual of Buddhism, Introd. § 13: 28.64

Hatthaka, xix.6: 30.144

Hatthilinga bird, 28.249

Haunted forest, 28.153; 29.18 f. pool, 29.310 f.
 sand-pile, 30.63 ff.

"Have we no relatives?" child's query, 28.300; 29.37, 357

Head-splitting, 28.156, 168 ff., 231; 30.26, 267

Heart-failure, 28.186; 29.238, 313; 30.5

Heaven attained by Act of Faith, 28.160 ff.; 30.266

Heedfulness, Appamāda Vagga, Book 2, 28.247

Heir in disguise, 28.294

Hell, Niraya Vagga, Book 22, 30.189

Hell Pot, 29.100, note 1, 103, 106 f.

Hells, Eight Great, 29.2
 See Avici, Mahā Roruva

Hereditary rule, 28.252; 29.31

Heretics
 and orthodox assemble, 28.164
 consorting with, forbidden, 30.250 f.
 discomfited, 30.19 ff., 36 ff., 189 ff.
 insult Buddha, 28.283 f.; xxiii.1: 30.199
 Six, 30.66 ff.

Heron swallows jewel, 29.284 ff.

Heron's Call, 30.234

Holy water, 30.171, 293 f.

Homesickness, 29.35; 30.182 f., 205

Honey, 28.180, 250

Honor to whom honor is due, xiv.9: 30.68

Horror of killing, genesis of, 28.18, note 1

Horse dies of broken heart, 28.3

Hosts of Māra, Nine, 28.4, 11
 See also Rains of Māra

Hot water and molasses, cure for disorder of humors, 30.339 prepared by elephant, 28.179

How anger marred a maiden's looks, xvii.1: 30.95

How did the Seven Buddhas keep Fast-day? xiv.4: 30.60

How Magha became Sakka, ii.7: 28.313

Human sacrifice, 29.104, 108 f., 241 ff., 245

Humorous stories, Introd. § 6 c: 28.36

Humors, disorder of (indigestion), 28.253, 278 f.; 29.35; 30.76, 121, 206, 271, 339

Hunger-strike (āhāra-upaccheda), 28.243; 29.227 f., 319 f.; 30.73, 89, 227

Hunter devoured by his own dogs, ix.9: 29.282

Husband and wife, vi.9: 29.194; xxiv.4 a: 30.223; xxvi.38: 30.336

Husband-honorer, iv.4: 29.46

Hypnotic states, 28.22 ff.
 See Arahatsip, Trance

"I have conquered!" 29.16, 263

Identification, by footprint, 28.275 f.; 29.278; 30.32
 by ring and mantle, 28.252
 by voice, 28.294 ff.

"If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out," i.1: 28.146

Illisa Jātaka (78), 29.49, note 1, 54

Illuminating jewels, 30.324

Impermanence, 28.15, 18; xx.2: 30.150

Impermanence, Suffering, Unreality, Introd. § 2 c: 28.15; 28.18; 30.163

Imprisonment of lizard, ix.11 f: 29.290
 of monks, ix.11 c: 29.288

Impurity of Body, see Meditation on Body

Inattentive laymen, xviii.9: 30.127

Incest, 30.70 f.

Indaka, deity, 30.49 f., 242

Indasāla cave, 30.80

Indigestion, see Disorder of humors

Indra, images, 28.324
 thunderbolt, 28.324; 30.257
 See also Sakka

Infancy legends, 28.1 f., 10, 13
 Ingratitude to parents, 29.260 f.; 30.201 ff.
 Injury, to animals, see Animals, killing of;
 also Murder
 to plants, 30.57, 99, 194
 Insanity, 28.227; 29.254; 30.117
 Inscription, on golden plate, 30.246 f.
 on golden vessel, 30.180 f.
 on leaf, 28.260 ff.; 29.177 f., 181
 on wood, 28.317
 Insolence, 28.39, 166 ff., 244 ff.; 29.120 f., 165 f.; 30.126 f., 215 f.
 Insolent monk, vi.3: 29.166; xxiv.1 a: 30.215
 monks, vi.2: 29.165
 youth, v.7 b: 29.120
 Intestinal disease, see Ahivātakaroga
 Intoxicating drink, 28.37 f., 163 f., 271,
 284, 316, 319; 29.85, 106, 194, 292,
 305, 312 f., 328 ff., 346 f.; 30.191
 occasion of heedlessness, 29.85
 "Is n't" cake, 28.231; 30.267 f.
 Iron Caldron, see Hell Pot
 Is there a path through the air? xviii.12:
 30.139
 It is not silence that makes the sage,
 xix.8: 30.145
 It is not tonsure that makes the monk,
 xix.6: 30.144
 It is the giver that makes the gift, xvii.6:
 30.111; xxvi.40: 30.339

 Jackal and otters, xii.2 a: 29.353
 and woman, 30.233
 Jains, 29.70 ff., 92 ff., 233; 30.196 doctrine of Non-Injury, 28.18
 Jakes, public, 29.132 f.
 Jālinī, goddess, 29.201
 Jambuka the Naked Ascetic, v.11: 29.130
 Janapada-Kalyāṇī, wife of Nanda, 28.
 218 ff.; xi.5: 29.336
 Jarā Vagga, Old Age, Book 11, 29.328
 Jātaka Book (Commentary), authorship,
 28.59 f.
 date, 28.1, note 1, 58
 earlier than Dh. cm., 28.49
 later than Buddhaghosa's Works, 28.49
 model of Dh. cm., 28.28 f.
 place in Buddhist Canon, 28.25
 references to Buddhaghosa's Commentaries, 28.49

references to, in Milindapañha, 28.
 60 ff.
 relation of Dh. cm. to, Introd. § 7 e:
 28.52
 Synoptical Table E, 28.53 ff.
 See also Nidānakathā
 Jaṭila, Elder, xxvi.33 c: 30.325
 limitless wealth of, 29.59; 30.327
 Jaṭilas, see Three brothers Kassapa
 seventy-four thousand, 28.210 ff.
 Jātimanta Jātaka (497), 28.167, note 1
 Jaundice, 28.159; 29.9, 49; 30.61
 Javasakuna Jātaka (308), 28.239
 Jealous monk, v.11 a: 29.130; xii.8: 29.363 queen and nautch-girl, xvii.1 b: 30.96 woman, 30.96; xxii.6: 30.194
 Jetavana monastery, erected by Anātha-piṇḍika, 28.8, 146 f., 220 residence of Buddha during nineteen seasons, 28.147
 Jewel Sutta recited at Vesāli, 30.171 f.
 Jeweled cloister, 30.2
 walls, 30.320 ff., 332
 Jeweler, monk, and heron, ix.10: 29.284
 Jewels
 flash light, 30.319 f., 324
 rain of seven kinds of, 29.183
 seven kinds of, 28.319 f., 322; 29.
 148 f., 183; 30.131, 316 f., 320 ff., 332 Jīvaka Komārabhacca, and Big and Little Wayman, 28.302 ff. attends Buddha, 29.197 f.
 Joke in earnest, xxiv.6 a: 30.230
 Jonah in the house, v.3: 29.115
 Jonah motif, 29.70, 115 f., 282, 287 f.
 Joseph and Potiphar's wife, motif, 30.22
 Jotika (Jotiya) and Jaṭila, xxvi.33:
 30.313
 Jotika (Jotiya), treasurer, xxvi.33 b:
 30.319
 limitless wealth of, 29.59; 30.320 ff., 328 f.
 Joy, wife of Sakka, 28.317 ff.
 Junha, king's minister, 30.26 f.

 Kacchapa (Bahubhāṇi) Jātaka (215),
 xxv.3 a: 30.248
 Kāka Jātaka (146), xx.8 a: 30.160
 Kāka, slave, 28.272
 Kākavaliya, possessor of limitless wealth,
 29.59

Kakkata Jātaka (267), 28.236
Kakusandha, Buddha, 28.208 f.; 30.219
Kāla, Elder, xii.8: 29.363
Kāla junior (Añña-Koṇḍañña) and Kāla senior, i.8 c: 28.204
Kāla junior and Kāla senior, merchants, i.6: 28.184
Kāla junior, lay disciple, xii.9: 29.365
Kāla, king of dragons, 28.196
Kāla, king's minister, 29.154; 30.26 f.
Kāla, son of Anāthapiṇḍika, 30.28 ff.
Kāla Udāyi, Elder, 28.218; 30.278
Kālakanni, see Jonah
Kālī, ogress, i.4: 28.170
Kālī, slave-woman, 28.256 ff.
Kālī, wife of Kotūhalaka, 28.252 ff.
Kaliṅga, king and kingdom of, 30.246
Kambaladāyaka Tissa, 29.155 ff.
Kamma (Karma), see Past Deeds, Fruit of Past Deeds
Kammaṭṭhāna, see Subjects of Meditation
Kāṇā and her mother, vi.7: 29.190
Kandagalaka Jātaka (210), 28.238 f.
Kandjur, parallels, 28.62 ff.
Kaṇha Usabha Jātaka (29), 30.45
Kanthaka, Buddha's horse, 28.3, 195; 30.33
Kapi Jātaka (404), 28.230, note 2
Kāpi, son of Kotūhalaka, 28.252 ff.
Kapila, Elder, 30.215 ff.
Kapila Sutta, 30.218
Kapilamaccha, xxiv.1: 30.215
Kapilapura, Kapilavatthu, birthplace of Buddha, 28.1
Buddha visits, i.9: 28.217; xiii.2: 30.2
Kappa (Kalpa), cycle of time, length of, 28.14
Kappa, pupil of Kesava, 29.34 ff.
Kappaṭa and the donkey, i.9 c: 28.224
Kappina the Great, vi.4: 29.167
Kāsāva Jātaka (221), 28.189, note 1
Kassapa, Buddha, 28.209, 292; 29.21, 66, 68, 83 f., 106, 130, 149, 168 f., 176, 222, 249, 301 f.; 30.52, 150, 154, 192, 215 f., 253 shrine of, 29.280 f.; 30.69, 230, 305, 329 f.
Kassapa the Great
endeavors to comprehend Rebirth, ii.5: 28.311
free from attachment, vii.2: 29.198

receives alms from Sakka, iv.10: 29.86 receives alms from young woman, 29.265 f.
two pupils of, v.2: 29.111
waited on by goddess, 29.266 wins a basket of cakes, xvi.7: 30.90
Kassapa, three brothers, 28.7, 197; i.8 f: 28.206
Kassapa, see also Kumāra Kassapa, Pūrāṇa Kassapa
Kaṭāhaka Jātaka (125), 30.126, note 1, 127
Kathāsaritsāgara, parallels, 28.62 f.
Kātiyāni, mother of Soṇa Kūṭikanna, 30.254 ff.
Kavira Port, 30.221
Keṇiya, Jaṭila, 29.22
Kesava, hermit, 29.34 ff.
Kappa, Nārada, and King of Benāres, iv.3 a: 29.34
Kevaddha Sutta, in part translated, 28.15 f.
Khadiraṅgāra Jātaka (40), 29.99, 268, note 1
Khadiravaniya Revata, seven-year-old novice, vii.9: 29.209
Khaṇḍahāla Jātaka (542), 28.230, note 2
Khantivādi Jātaka (313), 28.241
Khāṇu Koṇḍañña, Elder, viii.10: 29.246
Khema, nephew of Anāthapiṇḍika, xxii.4: 30.193 Khemā, queen, consort of Bimbisāra, conversion of, xxiv.5: 30.225 wisdom of, xxvi.20: 30.292
Khuddaka Nikāya, described, 28.25
Khuddaka Pāṭha Commentary, authorship, 28.51 f.
relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.52
Khujjuttarā, converts Sāmāvatī, 28.281 f.
former deeds of, 28.292 f.
Kiki, king, 29.68, 83
Killing of Mahā Kāla, xii.5: 29.359
Kimbila, prince, 28.231 ff.; 30.268
King, and King of Kings, iv.7: 29.56 and poor man with beautiful wife, v.1: 29.100 in disguise, 28.307 ff.
Kappina and Queen Anojā, vi.4 b: 29.169 of Benāres and Queen Dinnā, v.1 b: 29.108 of dragons and daughter, xiv.3: 30.56

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Lizard imprisoned, ix.11 f: 29.290
 Lizards, 29.290 f.; 30.159, 284 f.
 Loha Pāsāda, 30.237
 Lohakumbhi Jātaka (314), 29.100, note 1
 Loka Vagga, The World, Book 13, 30.1
 Longing of pregnancy, 29.39, 151, 184, 324
 "Look not on a woman to lust after her," rv.4: 30.73
 Loss of an eye, vii.7: 29.205
 Lotus bell, 30.248
 Lotus springs from charcoal-pit, 29.96 ff.
 Louse that would have his own, xviii.3:
 30.120
 Love for all living creatures (Mettā),
 28.17 ff.
 "Love your enemies," i.4: 28.170; 28.286,
 316; 29.42, 302 f.; 30.105 ff.; xxi.2:
 30.176
 Luck-child bearing charmed life, 28.256 ff.
 Lumbini Garden, birthplace of Buddha,
 28.1
 Lump of clay splits into seven pieces,
 30.169 f.
 Lute, elephant-charming, 28.248, 251 f., 270, 285

 Macala, village, 28.315
 Macchariya Kosiya, iv.5: 29.49
 Macchikāsanda, city, 29.144
 Madhurapācikā, former wife of monk,
 30.160
 Māgandiyā, father of Māgandiyā, 28.
 274 ff.; 30.31 f.
 uncle of Māgandiyā, 28.277, 288
 Māgandiyā, death, ii.1.6: 28.277
 marriage to Udena, 28.277
 plot against Buddha, 28.282 ff.;
 30.199 f.
 plot against Sāmāvatī, 28.282 ff.
 punishment, 28.288 ff.
 rejection of, by Buddha, ii.1.5: 28.274;
 xiv.1 a: 30.31
 Magga Vagga, The Path, Book 20, 30.149
 Maggots, meditation on, 30.219
 Magha, ii.7: 28.313
 Maghavā, epithet of Sakka, etymology of, 28.314
 Magic
 Act of Truth, 28.20, 168; 29.172,
 174 f.; 30.11 f., 105
 bird, 29.349 f.

burning-glasses, 30.321 f.
 change of form, 28.235
 change of sex, 29.24 ff.
 creation out of nothing, 28.320;
 29.173, 212; 30.320
 crystals, 30.321 f.
 distance shortened by, 28.156, 212 f.;
 29.52 f., 80, 224; 30.8, 47
 doors open of own accord, 29.293 earth converted to water, 30.42 earth rolled up like mat, 30.44
 earth shaken, 30.43
 flowers rained from sky, 29.147, 149 flowers suspended in air, 29.124
 flying through air, 28.189, 211, 221,
 235, 238, 255; 29.51 ff., 137, 304 f., 314, 321 f.; 30.19, 37 f., 298, 312 ff., 325 forgetfulness produced, 29.212 f., 341 gold softens, 30.329
 golden mountain, 30.327
 jewels, illuminating, 30.324 jewels rained from sky, 29.183 lighted finger, 29.135; 30.111
 lotus springs from charcoal-pit, 29.
 96 ff.
 mango-tree springs up, 30.41
 mind-reading, 28.277 ff.; 29.1 ff.;
 30.182 f.
 mountain swallowed, 30.44
 moon and sun stand still, 29.187, 189, 325, 327
 multiplication of food, 29.51 ff., 201 f.; 30.134 ff., 321
 multiplication of self, 28.304 f.;
 30.45 f.
 Paritta abates plagues, 30.171
 Paritta cheats ogre of prey, 29.236 f.
 passing through walls, 30.298, 312
 spitting fire, 29.51; 30.65
 sun and moon stand still, 29.187, 189, 325, 327
 sun stands still, 28.169; 30.42
 urns of treasure, 29.184; 30.320 ff.
 walking on water, 28.11; 29.172,
 174 f.
 transmutation of baser substances into gold, 29.257 f.; 30.101 f., 213 f.
 Magic for meat, xxii.3: 30.192
 Magicians, family of, 30.130 ff.

Mahā Brahṇā, declares himself an impostor, 28.16
 descends from heaven with Buddha, 30.53 inferior to Buddha, 28.16; 29.135 requests Buddha to preach Law, 28.6, 196 titles of, 28.16
 waits upon Buddha, 29.135
Mahā Dhammapāla Jātaka (447), 28.220
Mahādhana, Great-Wealth, merchant, ix.7: 29.274; xx.10: 30.164
 treasurer, xi.9: 29.346
Mahāduggata, Prince of Paupers, 29.177 ff.
Mahā Ekasāṭaka, Brahman, 29.262 f.
Mahā Haṃsa Jātaka (534), 28.236
Mahā Kaccā(ya)na, Elder, guardian of Jaṭila, 30.326 honored by Sakka, vii.5: 29.202 receives Soṇa Kūṭikaṇṇa, 30.254 ff.
 relations with Soreyya, 29.24 ff.
Mahā Kāla and Culla Kāla, merchants, i.6: 28.184
Mahā Kāla (householder) and Culla Kāla (Añña-Koṇḍañña), i.8 c: 28.204
Mahā Kāla, lay disciple, xii.5: 29.359
Mahā Kappina, king, vi.4: 29.167
Mahā Kassapa, see Kassapa the Great
Mahā Kosala, king, father of Pasenadi Kosala, 30.63
Mahāli, Licchavi prince, invites Buddha to Vesāli, 30.169 loses eyesight, 29.31
 questions Buddha, ii.7 a: 28.313
 youth, 29.31
Mahā Moggallāna, see Moggallāna the Great
Mahā Muṇḍa, father of Mahā- and Culla Sumana, 30.270
Mahāmuni, village, 30.220
Mahānāma, Elder, entertained by Citta, 29.144 youth, 28.231; 30.268 f.
Mahānāma, uncle of Buddha, captured by Viḍūḍabha, 29.45 gives daughter Vāsabhakhattiyā in marriage, 29.36 f.
 protected by Nāgas, 29.45
Mahā Paduma Jātaka (472), 30.19, note 1; xiii.9 a: 30.22
Mahā Paduma, prince, 30.22 f.

Mahā Pajāpati Gotamī, aunt and foster-mother of Buddha, 28.2
 conversion of, 28.218 receives Precepts, xxvi.8: 30.281
Mahā Pāla, see Cakkhupāla
Mahā Panthaka, 28.300 ff.; 30.299 f.
Mahā Parinibbāna Sutta, 30.69
Mahāpunṇa, village, 30.220
Mahā Roruva hell, 30.241
Mahāsatipaṭṭhāna Suttanta, 28.228; 30.221
Mahāsena gives alms to Sāriputta, v.15 a: 29.150
Mahā Suka Jātaka (429), 28.326, note 1
Mahāsupina Jātaka (77), 29.100, note 1
Mahā Sumana, brother of Sumana the novice, 30.270
Mahā-Suvaṇṇa, Great-Wealth, householder, 28.146
Mahāvamsa, 28.59
Mahāvana Grove, 28.196
Mahā Vihāra, Anurādhapura, 30.237
Kallaka, 30.221
Koṭipabbata, 30.220
Tissa, 30.221
Mahilāmukha, elephant, 30.251
Mahilāmukha Jātaka (26), 30.250, note 1, 251
Mahimsāsa, prince, and princes Moon and Sun, x.8 a: 29.309
Mahinda, king, father of Tissa and Phussa, 28.207
Maiden who married a thief, viii.3: 29.227
Majesty of Buddha, 28.305 f.; 30.31
Majjhima Commentary,
 authorship, 28.48
 referred to, 28.51, 62 f.; 29.120, note 1
 relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.51, 62 f.
Majjhima Nikāya, Aṅgulimāla Sutta translated, xiii.6: 30.6
 described, 28.25
 relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.45
Majority rule, 28.191
Mala Vagga, Blemishes, Book 18, 30.116
Mālabhārī, deity, 29.46 ff.
Mallikā, wife of Bandhula, 29.39 ff., 79
Mallikā, wife of Pasenadi Kosala, commits sin, 29.340
 death, 29.341
 quick to learn, 29.58

Mallikā, wife of Pasenadi Kosala, saves lives of innocent, 29.104 f., 108 ff. superintends Gifts beyond Compare, 29.341; 30.24 ff.
 wearer of great-creeper-parure, 29.79
Man whom women loved, xxii.4: 30.193
Maṇḍalārāma monastery, 30.221
Mandhātā Jātaka (258), 30.62
Maṇikāarakulūpaga Tissa, Elder, ix.10: 29.284
Maṇisūkara Jātaka (285), 30.189, note 1
Mantāṇi, son of, family name of Aṅgulimāla, 30.10
Māra, the Evil One,
 attempts to drive Buddha from his seat, 28.5, 11 f.
 daughters of, tempt Buddha, 28.5, 11, 276; xiv.1 b: 30.33 host of, overcome by Buddha, 28.5, 196
 Hosts of, Nine, 28.4, 11, 14 offers Buddha Universal Sovereignty, 28.3, 11; 30.33 possesses Brahman Verañja, 29.193 possesses villagers, 28.273; xv.2: 30.72 pursues Buddha for seven years, 30.33 questions Buddha, xxvi.3: 30.277
 Rains of, Nine, 28.5, 11 f.
 seeks rebirth-consciousness of Go-dhika, 29.90 f.
 seeks to frighten Rāhula, xxiv.8: 30.234
 tempts Buddha to abandon Great Retirement, 28.3, 11 to abandon Great Struggle, 28.4, 11, 14 to accomplish his decease, 28.5, 12, 14 to exercise sovereignty, 28.3, 11 ff.; 30.33; xxiii.8: 30.213 to transmute matter, 28.12 ff.; xxiii.8: 30.213
Marbles, 28.231, 259 f.; 30.267
 See also Ball-playing
Marriage-ceremonies, 29.61 ff.
Marriage of Visākhā, iv.8: 29.59
Matakabhatta Jātaka (18), 29.100, note 1, 110
Mātali, celestial charioteer, 30.53

Mātika, village and headman thereof, 29.2
Mātika, Mother of, 29.2 ff.
Maṭṭakunḍali Jātaka (449), 28.159, note 1
Maṭṭhakunḍali, i.2: 28.159
Māyā, queen, mother of Buddha, 28.1 f.
Mayhaka Jātaka (390), 30.239, note 1
Mechanical elephant, filled with warriors, 28.270
Medical treatment, given by monk, 30.125 monk accused of giving, 30.294
 See Physicians
Medicinal herb for charm, 28.272
Meditation, Practice of, 28.17 f.; Introd. § 3: 28.19; 28.30
 Catholic systems, 28.20 f.
 Forty Subjects of, 28.21 ff.
 Body, 28.22 ff., 186 f., 206, 278; 29.2, 9, 19, 152 f., 206, 239, 335; 30.6, 161 ff., 294, 336
 Buddha, 30.171, 179 ff., 288
 Death, 30.14 ff.
 Earth, 28.22 f.
 Fire, 29.128, 161, 315 f.; 30.65
 flowers, 30.162, 259 maggots, 30.219
 mirage, 29.30; 30.4
 pain, 28.289
 Three Jewels: Buddha, Law, Order, 29.172 ff.
 Water, 29.17
 See also Arahatsip, Hypnotic states, Trance
Meghiya, Elder, iii.1: 29.1
Meṇḍaka, see Treasurer Ram
Merchant Great-Wealth, ix.7: 29.274; xx.10: 30.164
Merchants, 28.184, 224; 29.274 ff.; 30.164 f., 326 f.
Merit and demerit, power of, 28.29 ff.
Merit, five persons of, 29.59 ff.
 made over to another, 28.209 f.; 29.102, 215, 235, 302 f.; 30.207, 266, 314
 sold, 29.235; 30.266
Mettā, doctrine of, 28.17 ff.
Middle Way, doctrine of, 28.18 f.
Migāra, father of Puṇṇavaḍḍhana, 29.61 ff.
 Mother of, 29.75 ff.; see Visākhā

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Mother, aunt, and grandmother of Buddha in 500 existences, 30.108 ff.
 Mother in previous state of existence, 30.207
 Mother of Kāṇā, vi.7: 29.190
 Mātika, 29.2 ff.
 Migāra, 29.75 ff.; see Visākhā
 Rāhula, 28.218 f.; see Yasodharā
 Mother of two and father of two, iii.9: 29.23
 Motifs of stories, Introd. § 6: 28.29
 alphabetic table of, Introd. § 6 b: 28.34
 Fruit of Past Deeds and Rebirth, Introd. § 6 a: 28.29
 Motive of Religious Life, Introd. § 2 b: 28.15
 Mountain of gold, 30.68, 327 ff.
 Mountain-top festival, 28.198
 Mouse-merchant, story of, referred to, 28.309
 Mucalinda-tree, 28.5
 Mūlasiri, son of Ānanda miser, 29.115 f.
 Multiplication of food, 29.51 ff., 201 f.; 30.134 ff., 321 feeding of 500, 28.11; 29.53
 Multiplication of self, 28.304 f.; 30.45 f.
 Muñjakesī, mare, 28.272
 Murder, of Sundarī, xxii.1: 30.189 penalty for, 29.143
 retribution for, 28.33; 29.110 f., 120, 214 ff., 306 ff., 360 ff.; 30.239 ff.
 See also Killing of animals
 Musical instruments, 28.156; 30.182
 Mustard-seed, cure for death, 29.258 f.
 Mysticism, see Meditation

Nāga kings honor Buddha, 30.172 ff.
 Nāga Vagga, The Elephant, Book 23, 30.199
 Nāga, see Dragon, Elephant
 Nāgasena, Elder, 28.226
 Naked Ascetics, Naggasamanakā, 29.305 f.
 Acelakas, 30.185, 196
 Ājīvakas, 29.54 ff., 130 ff.; 30.235
 Nigaṇṭhas, Jains, 29.70 ff., 92 ff., 233; 30.196
 Nālaka Sutta, in part translated, 28.1 f.
 Nālāgiri, elephant, 28.236
 Names, personal and family, 28.146, 159, 250, 268; 29.8, 37, 75, 152 f.,

155 f., 203, 237, 239, 256, 273, 297, 320, 350, 357; 30.10, 147, 320, 326
 Nanda the Elder, i.9: 28.217
 Nanda the herdsman, iii.8: 29.22
 Nandā, see Janapada-Kalyāṇī
 Nandi Visāla Jātaka (28), 30.45
 Nandiya attains heavenly glory, xvi.9: 30.92
 Naṅgalakula, Elder, xxv.10: 30.260
 Nārada, ascetic, 28.167 ff.
 king's minister, 29.34 ff.
 Nāthaputta, 30.36 ff.
 Nativity legends, 28.1, 10, 13
 Nautch-girls, 28.3, 7, 195, 269; 29.313 f.; 30.5, 96
 Navel, radiance from, 30.305 f.
 Nephew Saṅgharakkhita, Elder, iii.4: 29.10
 Nerañjarā, river, 28.196
 Net of Knowledge, 28.160; 29.20, 121, 158, 180, 277; 30.15, 31, 57, 64, 100, 228, 313
 Never-Gave, Adinnapubbaka, miser, 28.159 ff.
 New Testament parallels, Introd. § 1 i: 28.9
 Nibbāna, attainment of, motive of Religious Life, 28.15 meaning of word, 28.3
 Noble Eightfold Path to, Introd. § 2 e: 28.17 ff.
 of the living, 28.18
 resolve to seek after, Introd. § 1 d: 28.2 f.
 Supreme, 28.18
 synonymous with Escape from Round of Existences, 28.17 ff., 30
 Nidānakathā parallels, 28.193, note 1, 217, note 1
 Nigamavāsī Tissa, Elder, ii.9: 28.326
 Nigaṇṭhas, Jains, 29.70 ff., 92 ff., 233; 30.196
 Nigrodha Miga Jātaka (12), 29.356, note 1, 359
 Niggardly Kosiya, iv.5: 29.49
 Niggardly treasurer, v.3 a: 29.115; xxiv.11 a: 30.240
 Niggards, see Misers
 Nine Hosts of Māra, 28.4, 11
 Nine Rains of Māra, 28.5, 11 f.
 Nine traits of a family worthy of confidence, 29.33 f.

Nikāyas, Five, 28.25
 Nikāyas, Four, 28.25 relation of Dh. cm. to, Introd. § 7 a: 28.45
 Nilavāhanā, river, 29.172
 Niraya Vagga, Hell, Book 22, 30.189
 Nisabha, Elder, 28.211, 213
 No forgiveness of sins, 28.30
 No God, 28.15 f.
 No prayer, 28.19 f.
 No soul, 28.15
 Noble Eightfold Path, Introd. § 2 e:
 28.17 ff.
 Noble is as noble does, xix.9: 30.146
 Noble Truths, four, 28.6 f., 16 f.
 Non-Injury, doctrine of, 28.17 ff.
 Norman, H. C., 28.67
 Nose and ears cut off, 30.194
 Not by the faith of another, vii.8: 29.208
 "Not hatred for hatred," i.4: 28.170;
 xxi.2: 30.176
 Not therefore is a man praised for his much speaking, xix.3: 30.141
 Nothing, too much, and too little, xvii.7:
 30.113
 Novice and dragon, xxv.12: 30.264
 Novice and ogress, xxiii.5: 30.207
 Novices, see Seven-year-old novices
 Nun and phantom, xi.5: 29.336

 Oath to wash bench with human blood,
 29.38, 43
 Ocean-of-Beauty tempted by courtesan,
 xxvi.32: 30.308
 Offering of honey and seige of a city,
 vii.9 c: 29.214
 Ogres, man-eating, 29.237, 310 ff.
 Ogress, in form of heifer, 29.120, 221, 226 takes possession of child, 30.208, 293
 Ogresses, man-eating, 28.172 ff.; 30.177, 244
 "Oh happiness!" 29.176
 Ointment for affection of eyes, 28.151 ff., 158
 Old Age, Jarā Vagga, Book 11, 29.328
 Old Brahman and sons, xxiii.3: 30.201
 Old monks and old woman, xx.8: 30.159
 Oldenberg, H., on Buddhist-Christian parallels, 28.10
 Ominous dreams, 28.285 f.; 29.100, note 1
 Sights, Four, 28.2, 195
 Sounds, Four, 29.100, note 1, 103 ff.

On moderation in eating, xv.6: 30.76;
 xxiii.4: 30.206
 On the razor's edge, viii.11: 29.247
 One-Robe, Little, ix.1: 29.262
 Otters and jackal, xii.2 a: 29.353
 Ox burned, ix.11 d: 29.289

 Pabbhāravāsi Tissa, Elder, xxvi.21:
 30.292
 Pack of thieves, conversion of, xxv.7:
 30.254
 Pack of vagabonds, vi.8: 29.193
 Padakkhiṇa, see Circuit
 Padhānakammika Tissa, Elder, xx.5:
 30.151
 Padhānika Tissa, Elder, xii.3: 29.354
 Padumuttara, Buddha, 28.82 f.; 29.127,
 149, 167, 200, 254; 30.264, 269
 Pairs, Yamaka Vagga, Book 1, 28.146
 Pakiṇṇaka Vagga, Miscellaneous, Book
 21, 30.168
 Pāla, see Mahā- and Culla Pāla
 Palace of Victory, 28.319
 Pañcabalaka nuns, 30.221
 Pañcasikha, celestial musician, 30.53, 80
 Pañcatantra, referred to, 28.174, note
 Pañcavaggiya monks, see Band of Five Paṇḍaraṅga Order, 30.202
 Paṇḍava cave, 28.195
 Paṇḍita, seven-year-old novice, vi.5:
 29.176; 30.297
 Paṇḍita Vagga, The Wise Man, Book 6,
 29.163
 Paṇṇaka, king of dragons, 30.271 ff.
 Panthaka, see Mahā- and Culla Panthaka
 Parallels, see under separate titles
 Parantapa, king of Kosambi, 28.249, 251
 Parasol-deity, 30.265
 Pārileyyaka, elephant, 28.178 ff.; 30.211 ff.
 Paritta, abates plagues, 30.171
 cheats ogre of prey, 29.236 f.
 Parosahassa Jātaka (99), 30.56, note 1
 Parrot, Sakka and, ii.9 a: 28.327
 Pasāḍabahula, Brahman, xxvi.1: 30.276
 Pasenadi, king of Kosala,
 and poor man with beautiful wife,
 v.1: 29.100
 and Chattapāṇi, 29.57 f.
 asks Buddha place of rebirth of Mallikā, 29.341 f.
 attempts to obtain wife of poor man,
 29.100 ff.

Pasenadi, king of Kosala, befriends Culla
Ekasāṭaka, 29.263 f.
 cured of gluttony, 30.76 f., 206
 date of, 28.58
 deceived by Mallikā, 29.340 f.
 defeated by Ajātasattu, 30.73
 entertains monks, 29.32 ff.
 erects convent for nuns, 29.129
 gives Gifts beyond Compare, 30.24 ff.
 hears Four Ominous Sounds, 29.100,
 note 1, 103 ff.
 marries Vāsabhakhattiyā, 29.36 ff.
 meets Aṅgulimāla, 30.9
 obtains Dhanāñjaya from Bimbisāra,
 29.60 f.
 offers to erect pavilion for Buddha, 30.40
 orders sacrifice of living creatures, 29.100, note 1, 104 f.
 reappoints Aggidatta house-priest, 30.63
 sends precious stone to jeweler, 29.284 visits Buddha, 30.278
 youth of, 29.31

Password of Warrior caste, 28.250

Past Deeds, destruction of, 28.18 fruit of, 28.29 ff.
 power of, 28.29 ff.

Paṭācārā is bereft of all her family, viii.12:
 29.250; xx.12: 30.166

Path, Magga Vagga, Book 20, 30.149

Path to Heaven, treading, 28.315

Pāṭheyyaka monks, v.6: 29.118
 See Thirty noble youths

Pāṭhika, Naked Ascetic, iv.6: 29.54

Patient subdues insolent, xxvi.16: 30.
 288

Patient subdues violent, xxvi.7: 30.279

Pāṭimokkha recited, 30.216

Patipūjikā, iv.4: 29.46

Pāvāriya monastery, erection of, 28.280

Pāveyyaka, elephant, 30.211

Perfection of Knowledge of Chief Disciples, 28.203, 213 f.

Perfections fulfilled by Buddha, 28.147, 194; 30.171
 by disciples, 29.33

Perfumed Chamber,
 built by Aparājita, 30.316
 built by Avaroja, 30.131 built by Sumaṅgala, 29.302 created by Revata, 29.212

Pesakāra-dhītā, xiii.7: 30.14

Petavatthu Commentary, 28.57

Phantom women, 29.296 ff., 336 ff.;
 30.33 f., 225

Phussa, Buddha, 28.207

Physical disabilities, fruit of past deeds,
 28.32 f.

Physicians, 28.150 ff., 158 f.; 29.197 f., 283 f.; 30.294

Pickpocket, v.4: 29.117

Piece of meat, birds mistake human beings for, 28.249; 29.253

Pig-ghost, xx.6: 30.153

Pig-killing, 28.226

Pile of sand haunted by dragon, 30.63

Pilindavaccha, Elder, xxvi.25: 30.300

Pillars, inlaid, 30.131, 316

Pilotika, Elder, x.10: 29.316

Piṇḍapātadāyaka Tissa, 29.153 ff.

Piṇḍola Bhāradvāja performs miracle,
 xiv.2 a: 30.35

Piṅgala Jātaka (240), 28.242

Pingo, 30.339

Pious fraud, 28.210 f., 221, 317 f.; 29.44,
 86 ff.

Pischel, R., on Buddhist-Christian parallels, 28.9 f.

Piṭakas, three, 28.25

Plague, see Ahivātaka-roga

Plagues, three, at Vesāli, 30.168 ff.

Poor man and daughter, xvii.3: 30.99

Poor man wins spiritual treasure, vi.1:
 29.163

Poor man with beautiful wife, Pasenadi
 Kosala and, v.1: 29.100

Poṭhila the Empty-head, xx.7: 30.157

Potter, 28.259 f.

Practice of Meditation, see Meditation of Morality, see Morality

Prayer, forms no part of Religious Life,
 28.19 f.
 place of, supplied by Act of Truth,
 28.19

Preacher of Law, and king, x.9 a: 29.
 314 quarrels with student of Discipline,
 28.176 ff.

Precepts, Eight, 30.281
 Five, 28.163 f., 206, 322 f.; 29.8, 85,
 240, 311; 30.216, 246
 Ten, 29.8

Presumptuous monk, xxii.5: 30.194

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Removed, yet unremoved, 30.298
 Renegade monk, xxiv.3: 30.221
 Renounce both good and evil, xxvi.29: 30.303
 Repugnance for women, 30.86 ff.
 Resolve to seek Nibbāna, Introd. § 1 d: 28.2 f.
 Retirement, Great, Introd. § 1 e: 28.3; 28.195; 30.33 Retirement from world, formula, 28.148 f., 184 of six princes, i.12 a: 28.230
 Revata, seven-year-old novice, vii.9: 29.209; xxvi.29: 30.303; 30.297 admonishes Sammuñjani, 30.5 f.
 Buddha visits, vii.9 b: 29.211
 delight in solitude, 30.113
 Revati, wife of Nandiya, 30.92 ff.
 Reverence to whom reverence is due, xxvi.9: 30.282
 Rhys Davids, T. W., on authorship of Jātaka Book, 28.59 f.
 on date of Buddhist Scriptures, 28.1, note 1
 Riddling, charm, 28.307 ff.
 injunctions, 29.68, 72 f., 259, 278; 30.8, 185 phrases, 28.243 f.; 29.71 f., 121 f.
 questions, 29.231; 30.16
 stanza, 30.57 f.
 Righteous, Dhammaṭṭha Vagga, Book 19, 30.140
 Righteous lay brother, i.11: 28.228
 Rigidity of trance, see Trance
 Rings, finger-, 30.332 f.
 Robber Finger-garland, conversion of, 28.11, 13; xiii.6: 30.6
 Robbers' Cliff, 28.258; 29.228 f.; 30.23
 Robe-making, 29.201; 30.120
 Robes, disposition of, 28.287
 Rod, Daṇḍa Vagga, Book 10, 29.294
 Rogers's Buddhaghosha's Parables, Introd. § 14: 28.65
 Rohinī, river, 29.160 f.; 30.70
 sister of Anuruddha, 30.95 f.
 Rose-apple branch, 29.230 f.
 Round of Existences, see Beginningless Round of Existences
 Rūpa-Nandā, see Janapada-Kalyāṇī
 Sabhiya, Elder, 29.223
 Saccakiriya, see Act of Truth

Sacrifice of living creatures, 29.104, 235
 See Human sacrifice
 Sacrificial fire, 29.234
 thread, 29.134
 Sahassa Vagga, Thousands, Book 8, 29.218
 Sahassakkha, epithet of Sakka, etymology of, 28.314
 Sāketa, Brahman of, xvii.5: 30.108
 founding of, 29.61
 Jātaka (68), 30.108, note 1
 Sākiyas and Koliyas, quarrel between, xv.1: 30.70
 Vidūḍabha wreaks vengeance on, iv.3: 29.30
 Sakka (Indra), king of gods, acts as cook for Prince of Paupers, 29.180 ff.
 and parrot, ii.9 a: 28.327
 and poor man, vi.5 a: 29.176
 as jackal rebukes faithless wife, 30.233 bids Vissakamma erect pagodas, 30.187 bids Four Great Kings drive birds away, 29.187, 189, 325, 327 causes moon and sun to stand still, 29.187, 189, 325, 327 counsels goddess, 29.269 f.
 counsels tree-spirit, 29.109 creates three ladders, 30.53 decides quarrel among deities over nymph, 30.97
 discomfits Ciñcā, 30.22
 discomfits heretical teachers, 30.42 drives away evil spirits at Vesālī, 30.171 epithets of, etymology, 28.314
 erects palace for Jotika, 30.320 gives alms to Kassapa the Great, iv.10: 29.86 guards door-string, 29.187, 189, 325 ff.
 honors Mahā Kaccāyana, vii.5: 29.202
 in disguise praises Buddha, 28.197 ministers to Buddha in sickness, 29.135; xv.8: 30.79
 outwits a Brahman, 30.298
 previous deeds of, 28.314 ff.
 questions Buddha, 30.80, 236 f., 286, 292
 tempts Suppabuddha to deny his faith, 29.119 f.
 waits upon Buddha, 29.135

Sakka-pañha, xxiv.10: 30.236
Sakka-pañha Suttanta, 28.313
Sāl-tree, 28.1
Sālittaka Jātaka (107), 29.140, note 1
Sāliya Jātaka (367), 29.283, note 1
Salvation, Way of, 28.17 ff., 30
Sāmāvatī, birth and youthful career, ii.1.3: 28.266
 burning of, 28.288 ff.
 conversion of, 28.281 f.
 death, ii.1.6: 28.277
 marriage to Udena, 28.269
 previous deed of, 28.290 ff.
 relations with Mitta and Ghosaka,
 28.268 f.
 seeks alms, 28.267 f.
Sāmkassa, city, 30.53 f.
Sāmkha, Brahman, xxi.1 a: 30.174
Sāmkhya system, 28.19
Sāmkicca, seven-year-old novice, viii.9:
 29.238; 30.297
 miraculous birth of, 29.238 f.
Sammōdamāna Jātaka (33), 28.177,
 note 2
Sammujjani, Elder, xiii.5: 30.5
Sāmsāra, see Beginningless Round of Existences
Samuddavāṇija Jātaka (466), 28.230,
 note 2
Sāmyutta Commentary, authorship,
 28.48
 referred to by Jātaka Book, 28.49
 relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.49
Sāmyutta Nikāya, 28.25
 Anamatagga Sāmyutta, in part translated, 28.14 f.
 Lakkhaṇa Sāmyutta, in part translated, see Ghost-stories
 relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.45 f.
 Sānu Sāmyutta, translated, 30.207 ff.
 Synoptical Table A, 28.45 f.
Sandalwood, 30.35 f., 304 f.
Saṅghadāsi, daughter of King Kiki, 29.68,
 83
Saṅgharakkhita, Nephew, iii.4: 29.10
 Uncle, 29.10 ff.
Saṅjaya, ascetic, 28.8, 199 ff.
Saṅjaya, gardener, 30.312
Saṅjikāputta, friend of Prince Bodhi,
 29.349
Santakāya, Elder, xxv.9: 30.259
Santati, king's minister, x.9: 29.312

Sānu, novice, xxiii.5: 30.207
Sānu Sāmyutta, translated, 30.207 ff.
Sap of earth, 29.193; 30.44
Sappadāsa, Elder, viii.11: 29.247
Sarabhamiga Jātaka (483), 30.35, note 1
Sarabhaṅga Jātaka (522), 29.304
Sarada (Sāriputta) and Sirivaddha (Mog-gallāna), i.8 g: 28.210
Sāriputta and Moggallāna, life of, i.8 b:
 28.198
 previous lives of, i.8 g: 28.210 recover backsliding monks, 28.238
 visit a Brahman, 30.297
Sāriputta, converts Kuṇḍalakeśi, 29.231 ff.
 converts Tambadāthika, 29.220 f.
 enumerates his own virtues, vii.6:
 29.203
 expounds Abhidhamma to Atula,
 30.113 f.
 greeted Buddha at Sāmkassa, 30.54 is misunderstood, xxvi.27: 30.302 is reviled by his mother, xxvi.17: 30.289
 learning of, 30.55 f., 238
 patience of, 30.279, 289 f.
 preaches on benefits of almsgiving,
 28.189 f.
 questioned by Buddha, 29.188, 208 f., 326 f.; 30.54 ff.
 questions Puṇṇa Mantāniputta, 28.15 receives alms from Mahāsena, 29.150 f. receives alms from Puṇṇa, 30.100 receives alms from Rādhā, 29.163 receives Paṇḍita, 29.185 receives Sāmkicca, 29.239
 receives Sukha, 29.324 f.
 receives Vanavāsi Tissa, 29.152 f.
 reverence for Assaji, 30.282 sufficient unto himself, vii.8: 29.208 visits Vanavāsi Tissa, 29.156 ff.
Sāriputta's friend, viii.7: 29.235 nephew, viii.6: 29.234
 uncle, viii.5: 29.233
Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta, 28.228; 30.221
Satulakāyī, wife of Jotika, 30.321, 324, 333
Sattarasavaggiya monks, see Band of Seventeen
Scrupulousness of men of old, 30.245 ff.
Seats, arrangement of, 28.187 f., 212 f.
Sectaries insult Buddha, xxiii.1: 30.199
 See Heretics

Seeing double, 29.340

Self, Atta Vagga, Book 12, 29.349

Self-examination, by king, 28.169, 307
by monk, 30.294

See also Examination of conduct

Sena, householder, 30.315 f.

Set not your heart on worldly possessions,
xvi.6: 30.88

Setavya, Buddha visits, 28.187 ff.

Seven Brahmans, prophecy of, 28.2

Buddhas, observance of Fast-day,
xiv.4: 30.60

days, difficulties of Buddhas last only, 28.284

days' holiday, 28.310; 30.99 f.

days' rule, 29.312; 30.5, 27 kinds of jewels, see Jewels stores of wealth, 29.119

thousand nerves of taste, 30.268

Vows, 28.314 ff., 319

Yakkhas, 30.321

years in the womb, vii.9 c: 29.214;
xxvi.31: 30.307

Seven-year-old novice wins all hearts,
v.15: 29.150

Seven-year-old novices, stories of, Introd. § 6 f: 28.44

Cirā, 30.43 f.

Four novices, xxvi.23: 30.297

Paṇḍita, vi.5: 29.176; 30.297 ff.

Revata, vii.9: 29.209; 30.297 ff.

Samkicca, viii.9: 29.238; 30.297 ff.

Sopāka, 30.297 ff.

Sukha, x.11: 29.318

Sumana, xxv.12: 30.264

Tissa, v.15: 29.150

Seventeen, Band of, 29.294 f.

Seyyasaka, Elder, ix.2: 29.264

Sex, change of, 29.24 ff.

She-goat suckles child, 28.258

Shoddy, 30.120

Shoes, ornamental, 30.178

wooden, 30.115

Shortness of human life, 29.47 f.

Shrines, three kinds of, 30.69

Siddhattha, personal name of Gotama
Buddha, 28.2; 30.33

Signs, verses relating to, 28.275 f.; 30.32

Silava Nāga Jātaka (72), 28.241

Simeon, Buddhist, Introd. § 1 b: 28.2

Simpleton, Bāla Vagga, Book 5, 29.100

Simpletons' Holiday, ii.4: 28.310

Simśapā forest, 28.187

Siṅgila bird and monkey, v.2 a: 29.114

Sirigutta and Garahadinna, iv.12: 29.92

Sirikūṭa, king, 30.340

Sirimā and Uttarā, xvii.3 b: 30.103

death of, xi.2: 29.330

Sirivaddha (Moggallāna) and Sarada
(Sāriputta), i.8 g: 28.210

Sivali, Elder, birth of, xxvi.31: 30.307 honored by deities, 29.212 ff.

previous deeds of, vii.9 c: 29.214

Six, Band of, x.1: 29.294; x.2: 29.294;
xvii.8: 30.115; xix.2: 30.140

Six heretics, 30.36 ff.

Six princes, play marbles, 28.231; 30.267 retire from world, i.12 a: 28.230

Sixteen Dreams, 29.100, note 1

Octads, 30.254

Sixteens, Gift of, 29.264

Sixty, Mission of, 28.7, 10, 13, 197

Skeleton-ghost, xxii.2: 30.191

Skeptical ascetic, 28.6, 196; xxiv.9: 30.235

Skin-eruption, 29.9, 20 ff.; 30.95 f.

Skull-tapper, xxvi.37: 30.334

Slave lays down burden, xxvi.19: 30.291

runaway, 30.291

Slaves of a shrine, 29.281

Slip of tongue, 28.264; 29.344

Smile of Buddha, 29.312 f., 347; 30.164, 219, 311

of Moggallāna, 29.138 f., 141, 301;
30.153, 192

See also Laugh, Laugh and cry

Snake and Mongoos, story of, referred to, 28.174

Snake as slave, 29.247 ff.

Snake-bite, 29.252

Snake-ghost, v.12 b: 29.139; see also
Boa-constrictor ghost

Snake-ghost and crow-ghost, v.12: 29.137

Snapping of fingers, 29.86, 267; 30.157

Sneezing, ejaculation upon, 30.288

Social position, depends on family of father, 29.39

Sodhana, Elder, 30.215 f.

Soil of the heart, iv.1: 29.29

Soldier and man with beautiful wife, xii.5 a: 29.360

Solitary monk, xxi.9: 30.187

Solitude, praised by Buddha, 28.181 f.,
280; 30.213

Somadatta Jātaka (211), 29.343, note 1

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Suppavāsā, mother of Sivali, gives alms daily to Buddha, 29.32 with child for seven years, 30.307 f.
 Suppiyā, cuts flesh from her thigh, 29.78
 Suriya, prince, 29.309 ff.
 Susīma, son of Saṁkha, 30.174 ff.
 Sutta Nipāta, Nālaka Sutta, in part translated, 28.1 f.
 place in Buddhist Canon, 28.25
 Sutta Nipāta Commentary, referred to, 28.49
 Sutta Piṭaka, described, 28.25
 Suvannabhūmi, 30.220 f.
 Sword breaks, 29.243
 Sycophants and rich youth, 29.346 ff.
 Synoptical Tables:
 Aṅguttara and Therī-Gāthā Commentaries (D 1), 28.49
 Aṅguttara Commentary (D 2), 28.50 f.
 Jātaka Book (E), 28.53 ff.
 Milindapañha (G), 28.61 f.
 Saṁyutta (A), 28.45 f.
 Thera-Gāthā Commentary (F), 28.57
 Udāna (C), 28.48
 Vinaya (B), 28.46 f.
 Tagarasikhi, Private Buddha, 29.120; 30.240
 Takkaṣilā (Telapatta) Jātaka (96), xxv.1 a: 30.243
 Talkative tortoise, xxv.3 a: 30.248
 Talkativeness cured by tossing pellets of dung into the mouth, 29.142
 Talmud, stories in, 28.26
 Tambadāthika, public executioner, 29.120; viii.1: 29.218
 Tanhā, see Craving
 Tanhā Vagga, Craving, Book 24, 30.215
 Tapussa and Bhallika, first converts, 28.5
 Tathāgata suffers not, vii.1: 29.197
 Teacher cures a monk of love, xi.2: 29.330
 Teachings of Buddha, Introd. § 2: 28.14
 Telapatta (Takkaṣilā) Jātaka (96), xxv.1 a: 30.243
 Temptations by Evil One, see Buddha, Māra
 Ten Admonitions to bride, 29.68, 72 f.; 30.185
 Precepts, 29.8
 Royal Virtues, 30.23, 246

Terms of Abuse, 28.283; 30.199
 ways of acquiring merit, 28.156
 Thanksgivings, saying of, enjoined by Buddha, 30.145 f.
 Thera-Gāthā Commentary, relation to A. cm., 28.56 f.
 relation to Dh. cm., 28.56 f.
 Synoptical Table F, 28.56 f.
 Therī-Gāthā Commentary, relation to A. cm., 28.49 f., 56 f.
 relation to Dh. cm., 28.49 f., 56 f.
 Synoptical Table D 1, Commentaries on Aṅguttara, Dhammapada, and Therī-Gāthā, 28.49
 Thieves, 28.185, 307 f., 316; 29.117, 121 ff., 218 ff., 227 ff., 241 ff., 245 f., 274 ff., 301 ff., 304 ff., 360 f., 365; 30.6 ff., 195, 216 f., 222, 232 f., 256 ff., 318 f., 320
 thieves' yell, 29.307
 tunnel-thieves, 28.307 f.; 29.121 ff.; 30.256 ff.
 Thirty monks, xiii.8: 30.18
 Thirty noble youths, conversion of, 28.197; v.6: 29.118
 previous deeds, i.8 e: 28.206
 Thirty-three gods, previous deeds of, 28.315 ff.
 Thirty-two Constituent Parts of Body, see Meditation on Body
 Thou shalt surely die, xx.10: 30.164
 Thought-controlled, Elder, iii.5: 29.12
 Thoughtful, wife of Sakka, 28.317 ff.
 Thoughts, Citta Vagga, Book 3, 29.1
 Thousands, Sahassa Vagga, Book 8, 29.218
 Thread, sacrificial, 29.134
 Three, brothers Kassapa, conversion, 28.7, 197 brothers Kassapa, previous deeds, i.8 f: 28.206 Characteristics, 28.15, 18; 30.150 f.
 Evil Thoughts, 29.1
 great assemblages, 30.173
 Jewels: Buddha, Law, Order, 29.170 ff.
 Jewels, meditation on, 29.172 ff.
 kinds of perfumes, 29.84 f.
 kinds of shrines, 30.69
 ladders, 30.53 f.
 mansions, 28.2, 7, 194
 parties of monks, ix.11: 29.286

Three, strides of Buddha, 30.47
 treasurers, 28.277 ff.
 women possessed of great-creeper-parure, 29.79
 Throne of Wisdom, 28.196
 Thulla Tissa, i.3: 28.166
 Tibetan parallels, 28.64
 version of Dhammapada, 28.26
 Tip of staff, 28.154 f.; 29.297
 Tipiṭaka, see Buddhist Scriptures, Tripi-ṭaka
 Tissa, Buddha, 28.207
 Elder, honors Buddha by heedfulness, 30.78
 Elder, reborn as louse, 30.120 f.
 Fat, Elder, i.3: 28.166
 fault-finding novice, 30.126 f.
 Forest-dweller, novice, v.15: 29.150
 Kambaladāyaka, novice, 29.155 ff.
 Kosambivāsi, Elder, vii.7: 29.205
 Mahā, Elder, reciter of Dhammapada, 30.221
 Maṇikārakulūpaga, Elder, ix.10:
 29.284
 Nigamavāsi, Elder, ii.9: 28.326
 of the Market-town, Elder, ii.9:
 28.326
 Pabbhāravāsi, Elder, xxvi.21: 30.
 292
 Padhānakammika, Elder, xx.5: 30.
 151
 Padhānika, Elder, xii.3: 29.354
 Piṇḍapātadāyaka, novice, 29.153 ff.
 Pūtigatta, Elder, iii.7: 29.20
 seven-year-old novice, v.15: 29.150
 Vanavāsi, novice, v.15: 29.150
 Tortoise and geese, xxv.3 a: 30.248
 Traitor monk, xxv.5: 30.250
 Trance, of Cessation, 28.213; 29.86;
 30.265 f.
 of Compassion, 28.160, 211; 29.49
 rigidity of, 29.243 f., 246 f., 305;
 30.222
 Trances, four, 28.21 ff.
 Translations of Dhammapada, Introd.
 § 15: 28.66
 of other canonical works, 28.68 f.
 Transmutation of baser substances into gold, 29.257 f.; 30.101 f., 213 f.
 Treacherous wife, 30.232 f.
 Treasurer Catfoot, ix.6: 29.272
 Treasurer Childless, xxiv.11: 30.239

Treasurer Gandha, x.11 a: 29.318
 Treasurer Jotika, xxvi.33 b: 30.319
 Treasurer Ram, xviii.10: 30.130; 30.
 327 f.
 limitless wealth of, 30.130, 327 f.
 previous deed as Nephew Aparājita, 30.316
 rams of, golden wish-fulfilling, 30.130
 327
 Treasurer Sumaṅgala and thief, x.6 a:
 29.301
 Treasurers, monks, and tree-spirit, 28.
 277 ff.
 Tree-spirit, human sacrifice to, 29.108 f., 241 ff., 245
 mind-reading, 28.277 ff.; 29.108 f.; 30.182 f.
 vow to, 28.146; 29.108 f., 228, 241 ff., 245
 Tree-spirits and monks, 28.44, 277 ff.;
 29.17, 211; 30.98, 141
 Trick, consequences of curse avoided by,
 28.169 f.
 Trickster Brahman, xxvi.11: 30.283
 Tricksters, see Fakirs
 Tripiṭaka, Chinese, printed from blocks
 in 972 A. D., 28.26
 Tug of war, xxvi.15: 30.287
 Tuṇḍila Jātaka (388), 28.206; 29.118
 Tunnels, 28.307; 29.121 ff.; 30.256 ff.
 Twenty-four Buddhas, 28.194
 Twin Miracle, xiv.2: 30.35
 description of, 30.45 f.
 Two brethren, i.14: 28.244; ii.6: 28.
 312
 Two duties of monks, 28.149, 244 f.;
 29.238; 30.215
 Two duties of Noble Disciples, 28.147
 Ubhatobhaṭṭha Jātaka (139), 28.239
 Udāna, model of Dh. cm., 28.28
 place in Buddhist Canon, 28.25
 relation of Dh. cm. to, 28.47
 Synoptical Table C, 28.48
 Udānavarga, 28.26
 Udāyi, Elder, v.5: 29.117; see Lāḷa Udāyi
 See also Kāḷa Udāyi
 Uddaka Rāmaputta and Āḷāra Kālāma,
 Yoga teachers,
 Buddha's student-days under, 28.4,
 195 f.
 death, 28.6, 196

Udena, king of Kosambi, Story-Cycle of, ii.1: 28.247 parallels to Story-Cycle of, 28.51;
 Introd. § 11: 28.62
 birth, 28.250
 birth and youthful career, ii.1.1: 28.247 captured by Caṇḍa Pajjota, 28.270 f.
 conversion, 28.286
 makes Ghosaka treasurer, 28.264 f. marries Māgandiyā, 28.277
 marries Sāmāvatī, 28.269
 marries Vāsuladattā, 28.271 ff.
 Ugga, treasurer, 30.184
 Uggasena, acrobat, xxiv.6: 30.226; xxvi.14: 30.286
 Uggasena, king, 29.109
 Ujjhānasaññī, Elder, xviii.11: 30.138
 Ungrateful children, see Disloyal children
 Unjust judges, 29.41; xix.1: 30.140
 Unreality, 28.15, 18; xx.4: 30.151
 Unrighteousness of king cause of misfortune to subjects, 30.168
 Unshaken as a rock, vi.6: 29.189
 Upaka, Naked Ascetic, 28.6, 196; xxiv.9: 30.235
 Upāli, barber, 28.233 f.
 Upananda, Elder, xii.2: 29.352
 Upariṭṭha, Private Buddha, 28.231; 30.265 ff.
 Upasāḥhaka Jātaka (166), 29.160
 Upatissa (Sāriputta) and Kolita (Moggallāna), life of, i.8 b: 28.198
 See Sāriputta and Moggallāna
 Upavāṇa, Elder, 30.339
 Uppalavaṇṇā, nun, offers to perform miracle, 30.44 rape of, v.10: 29.127
 referred to, 30.290
 Uruga Jātaka (354), 30.83, note 1
 Urns of treasure, 29.184; 30.320 ff.
 Uruvelā, 28.4, 7, 197
 Uttara, Brahman youth, 30.57 ff., 206
 Uttarā, aged nun, xi.3: 29.334
 Uttarā, female lay disciple, 30.103 ff.
 and Sirimā, xvii.3 b: 30.103
 Uttarā, see Khujjuttarā
 Uttarakuru, 29.223; 30.51, 321 f.
 Vaggumudātīriya monks, xxii.3: 30.192
 Vajjian prince who became a monk, xxi.6: 30.182

Vakkali, Elder, xxv.11: 30.262
 Vālodaka Jātaka (183), 29.193, note 1, 194
 Vanavāsi Tissa, seven-year-old novice, v.15: 29.150
 Vaṅganta, father of Sāriputta, 29.150
 Vaṅgiṣa, skull-tapper, xxvi.37: 30.334
 Varāṇa Jātaka (71), 30.151, note 1, 152
 Vāsabhakhattiyā, wife of Pasenadi Kosala, 29.36 ff., 58
 Vāsava, epithet of Sakka, etymology of, 28.314
 Vāsuladattā, winning of, by Udena, ii.1.4: 28.270
 Vātamiga Jātaka (14), 30.312
 Velāma Sutta, 29.268
 Veḷuvana monastery, presented to Buddha, 28.8, 198
 Vepacitti, king of Asuras, 28.323
 Verañja, Brahman, 29.193
 Verañjā, Buddha visits, 29.193
 festival at, 30.182
 Vesāli, Buddha visits, xxi.1: 30.168
 Vessantara, Future Buddha, 28.194
 Jātaka (547), 28.218; 30.3
 Vessavaṇa (Kuvera), 28.173; 29.237, 310
 Veṭṭhadīpaka, king, 28.247 ff.
 Viḍūḍabha wreaks vengeance on the Sākiyas, iv.3: 29.30
 Vijjādhara has intercourse with maiden, 30.325
 Vimānavatthu Commentary, 28.57
 Vinaya Piṭaka, described, 28.25 relation of Dh. cm. to, Introd. § 7 b: 28.46
 Synoptical Table B, 28.46 f.
 Vinicchaya-mahāmaccā, xix.1: 30.140
 Vipassī, Buddha, 29.214, 262, 314; 30.131
 Viraka Jātaka (204), 28.238
 Virocana Jātaka (143), 28.238 f.
 Virtue bought and paid for, xiii.11: 30.28
 Virtue of king, welfare of subjects depends on, 28.169
 Visākha and Dhammadinnā, xxvi.38: 30.336
 Visākhā, almsgiving of, 28.147, 242 f.; 29.32; 30.1 f.
 Earnest Wish of, iv.8 a: 29.82
 erects Pubbārāma monastery, 28.147 examines accused nun, 29.357

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

- Women, wives of, forty, 30.311
 Wooden bird, able to fly, 29.349 f. elephant, filled with warriors, 28.270 shoes, 30.115
 spoon, 29.134
 World, Loka Vagga, Book 13, 30.1
 World of Brahmā, monk visits, 28.15 f.
 women excluded from, 28.318
 World-renowned teacher, young man, and king of Benāres, ii.3 c: 28.306
 Writing, see Inscription

 Yakkhas, see Ogre, Ogress
 seven guardian, 30.321
 Yamaka Pāṭihāriya, xiv.2: 30.35
 Yamaka Vagga, Pairs, Book 1, 28.146
 Yasa and fifty-four companions,
 conversion of, 28.7, 197
 previous deeds, i.8 d: 28.205
 Yasodharā, wife of Buddha, 28.2
 See Mother of Rāhula
 Yellowstone Throne of Sakka, 28.155,
 320, 327; 29.180, 187, 325; 30.48,
 298, 320
 Yoga system, 28.19
 Young Archer the Wise, xxiv.7: 30.231
 Young girl jests with young monk, xiii.1:
 30.1
 Young sow, xxiv.2: 30.219
 "You're rubbing!" charm, 28.307 f.
 Youth and demons, xxi.5: 30.179
 Youth and marriage of Buddha, Introd.
 § 1 c: 28.2
 Youth who married a female acrobat, xxiv.6: 30.226

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

HENRY CLARKE WARREN

(1854—1899)

OF CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS, U. S. A.

—

A Brief Memorial

By C. R. LANMAN

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

from his father and mother¹ — was uncommonly elevated and unselfish and strong. Shut out by his crippled body from many of the joys of boyhood and young manhood, he bravely set himself to make the most of what remained to him.

Henry Warren received careful private instruction and the advantages of travel (journeys to Europe and Egypt); and his native broadness of mind soon showed itself in a catholicity of interest very unusual for one of his years. In Harvard College he won the affectionate regard of his teacher, Professor George Herbert Palmer, by his keen interest in the history of philosophy. He became an intelligent student of Plato and Kant, and the natural trend of his mind towards speculative questions showed clearly in his later scientific investigations of Buddhism. With all this went an eager curiosity about the visible world around him. We can easily believe that he would have attained to distinction in natural science, so good were his gifts of observation and well-balanced reflection upon what he saw. He used his microscope with great satisfaction in botanical study. At Baltimore he worked with enthusiasm in the chemical ¹ Samuel Dennis Warren was born in Grafton, Massachusetts, September 13, 1817, and died in Boston, Massachusetts, May 11, 1888. His grandfather, Joseph Warren, took part in the war of the American Revolution, marching from Grafton to Lexington, April 19, 1775. Joseph's great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather, both named John Warren, crossed over from England in 1630 with Governor Winthrop on the ship Arbella. The Warrens came from Nayland, in the county of Suffolk, England.

In 1854, Samuel Dennis Warren bought the paper-mills in Westbrook, Maine, now known as the Cumberland Mills. He became one of the most eminent and useful and successful business men of his day, honored for his ability and sterling integrity, and beloved for his goodness. His wife was the daughter of Reverend Dorus Clarke of Westhampton, Massachusetts. She was born March 3, 1825, at Blandford, Massachusetts, and died September 1, 1901, at Waltham, Massachusetts.

Henry Warren left three brothers, Samuel Dennis Warren, Jr., Edward Perry Warren, and Fiske Warren, and a sister, Cornelia Warren. The brothers were graduates of Harvard College, in the classes (respectively) of 1875, 1883, and 1884, and the Harvard Class-reports contain accounts of the lives of all four brothers.

The genealogy of the Warren family, with historical notes, is given in the volume entitled "The Warren-Clarke genealogy. By Rev. Charles White Huntington. Privately printed, Cambridge, 1894." Miss Warren has written a volume entitled "A Memorial of my Mother, by Cornelia Warren. Boston, privately printed, 1908." It contains much also about her father and her brother Henry. Here also should be mentioned the volume entitled "Samuel Dennis Warren, September 13, 1817—May 11, 1888. A Tribute from the people of Cumberland Mills. Cambridge, printed at the Riverside Press, 1888." The first and third of these three last-named volumes, and of course also all the Harvard Class-reports, may be consulted at the Harvard Library.

laboratory. And through all his later years, an aquarium was a thing which he maintained with intelligent and persistent interest. But for the most part he was forced, reluctantly, we may guess, to see with the eyes of others; and accordingly his reading in the natural sciences — in those just mentioned, in physiology and kindred subjects ancillary to medicine, and in geography — was wide, and was for him a well-chosen foil to the severer Oriental studies which became his unprofessed profession. As a further resource for diversion in hours of weariness or solitude, he took to books of travel and of fiction; and by way of zest, acceptable to so active a mind, he read them, one in German, another in Dutch, and another in French or Spanish or Russian.

The field of science, however, in which he made a name for himself is Oriental philosophy, and in particular, Buddhism, conceived, not as a simple body of ethical teaching, but as an elaborate system of doctrine. He had begun the study of Sanskrit, as an undergraduate at Harvard, with Professor Greenough; and, after taking his bachelor's degree in 1879, had continued the study at the newly established Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, first under Professor Lanman, and then, after Lanman had been called (in 1880) to Harvard, with Lanman's pupil and successor, Professor Bloomfield. In 1884 Warren returned to the home of his father in Boston. In May, 1884, he went to England for a stay of a few weeks, partly to visit his brother Edward at Oxford, and partly to meet the Pāli scholar whose influence on the course of his future studies proved to be so large, Professor Rhys Davids. On the death of his father in 1888, he made trial of the climate of Southern California, but soon came home. In September, 1891, he established his residence at Cambridge, in a beautiful place on Quincy Street, opposite Harvard College Yard and near the Library, in what had been the dwelling of Professor Beck; and there he lived for the rest of his days.

Warren was elected a member of the American Oriental Society in 1882; and ten years later he was chosen Treasurer, relieving Lanman, who was then serving as Corresponding Secretary and as Treasurer. This office he held till his death, doing its duties with scrupulous care until the end.¹ Thus, either as productive worker or as a Director or as both, he was for almost two decades an interested and active member, one of the kind that really promote the fundamental objects of such an organization. He was glad to be made a member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland.¹ His name is on the first list of members of the Pāli Text Society of London, among the "Subscribers for six years;" and later it appears (for such was the usage of the Report) among those of the "Donors" as one of the most generous givers.² Even this slight publicity was doubtless unwelcome; for, constant as were his gifts to causes that proved themselves worthy, he was more than unostentatious. For the most valuable single object in the Harvard Semitic Museum, a perfectly preserved Assyrian tablet, half of the purchase-money came as a wholly unsolicited gift from Warren.

¹ Elected a corporate member at Boston — see Journal, vol. 11, page cvi. Chosen Treasurer at Washington, Journal, 15, page cxliv. His seven Annual Reports as Treasurer (April, 1892–December, 1898) appear in the Journal, volumes 16–20.

As a citizen, whether of the municipality or of the Commonwealth, he was ever ready to do his share in works of enlightened organized charity, or to help, for example, in the preservation of our forests or in the reform of the civil service. His public-spirited action was as modest as it was zealous. The maxim of the misprized Epicurus he had taken to heart, "Well hid is well lived," λάθε βιώσας.

Warren's bodily afflictions tended to make him of shy and retiring habit. But the few who knew him well, knew him as a man of strength and tenderness. His ever-present troubles he never obtruded on others, but — by resolute will, I think — he studiously made light of them. In this he was helped by his native sense of humor. While working in the chemical laboratory at Baltimore, he burned his left hand severely with nitric acid, but he made fun of the unsightly scar, conspicuous on the back of his hand, calling it "nitrate-of-Warren." This sense of humor never forsook him, even to the end. Shortly before his death, a friend sent him some brandied peaches. "I can't eat your peaches," said he, "but I appreciate the spirit in which they are sent." He had been accustomed, while at work, to stand up at a high desk, with two crutches under his arms to take the weight off his spinal column. Towards the end, even this was too hard, and he worked resting the weight of his trunk on his elbows while kneeling at a chair, so that the knees of his trousers showed hard usage. Perhaps in retort to some mild chaffing from me, — he made answer, "Ah, but when Saint Peter sees those knees, he'll say, 'Pass right in, sir, pass right in.'"

¹ His election is recorded in the Journal of the R. A. S. for 1885, Annual Report, page ii.

² See Journal of the P. T. S. for 1882, page 16, and for 1896, page 117.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

edition had then progressed as far as the third volume; and with a version of the first story of that volume, the "Little Kālinga Birth-story," Mr. Warren made his début in print. This translation, presumably the first ever made in America from the Pāli, appeared October 27, 1884, and, for an interesting reason, in the Providence Journal. The Library of Brown University, at Providence, contained what was at that time doubtless the only large portion of the Buddhist scriptures in America, some twenty odd palm-leaf manuscripts given to it by Rev. J. N. Cushing, long a Baptist missionary in Rangoon. An English specimen of these strange books might therefore be presumed to interest the University town.

There followed, a few months later, a paper "On superstitious customs connected with sneezing," published in the Journal of the American Oriental Society (volume 13, May, 1885), a striking evidence, not only of the riches of the Jātaka-tales in curious folk-lore, but also of Warren's enthusiasm, now thoroughly awakened.

His study of the Pāli literature was now prosecuted with zeal and persistence, and his knowledge of the texts, the unedited as well as the edited, grew constantly wider and deeper. His first objective was naturally the edited texts. These, when he began his Pāli studies, were few indeed. The Danish scholar, Fausböll, had published the Dhammapada, with copious extracts from the Commentary (1855), and (from 1858 on) many of the Jātakas, and in 1877 had begun his monumental edition of the Jātaka-book. In 1880, his countryman, Trenckner, gave us the Milinda, a model of editorial workmanship. And between 1879 and 1883 appeared Oldenberg's Vinaya. With the establishment of the Pāli Text Society in 1881 by Rhys Davids, the centre of Pāli studies shifted from Copenhagen to London, and — thanks to Davids's energy and vigor — the printed texts multiplied rapidly. The first volume of the Samyutta appeared in 1884, and that of the Anguttara in 1885. The first half of the important Majjhima, from Trenckner's masterhand, came out in 1888, and was followed in 1890 by Davids's edition of the first third of the no less important Dīgha. Such are the edited texts, selections¹ from which form the bulk (say four fifths) of Warren's Buddhism.

As for the unedited texts, — one good fifth of Warren's Buddhism (say one hundred pages and more) consists of translations of some fifty passages selected from Buddhaghosa's great treatise on Buddhism, entitled The Way of Salvation or Visuddhi-magga. These versions constitute, as will appear, a remarkable achievement. Warren's catalogue of the "Pāli manuscripts in the Brown University Library," published in the Journal of the Pāli Text Society for 1885, proves that he had already acquired the power of reading these palm-leaf books — no easy acquisition, when one considers the crabbed characters, the lack of contrast of color (black on brown, not black on white), and the maddening absence of adequate paragraphing and spacing and punctuation.¹ Repeated evidence of his labors with the refractory material of the palm-leaf books was given by Warren in the years when he was not only writing his Buddhism, but also editing the Visuddhi-magga. His paper entitled "Buddhaghosa's Visuddhi-magga" is a general and most illuminating account of that work, and was published in the Transactions of the Ninth International Congress of Orientalists, held in London, 1892, and may be used as an introduction to his very important essay entitled "Table of contents of Buddhaghosa's Visuddhi-magga," published in the Journal of the Pāli Text Society for 1891–1893. Further evidence is given by his two papers in volume 16 of the Journal of the American Oriental Society: of these, one "On the so-called Chain of Causation of the Buddhists" (April, 1893) discusses the famous formula in which Buddha endeavors to account for the origin of evil; and the other, "Report of progress of work upon Buddhaghosa's Visuddhi-magga" (March, 1894), gives a brief but highly interesting account of Warren's work as a pioneer in this very difficult field.

¹ A list of the original sources of these selections and of those from the Visuddhimagga is given, with an index, by Miss C. B. Runkle, in the Journal of the Pāli Text Society for 1902-1903.

But these minor papers were only chips from the two keels which he had laid for craft of large dimension and ambitious design. He realized how scant at most were the time and strength presumably at his disposal, and wisely judged it best to devote that little, not to the learned odds and ends on which many scholars fritter their days away, but rather to two extensive works, each likely to be of long-lived usefulness and of enduring significance in the history of Oriental studies. The larger of the two works was his edition and translation of Buddhaghosa's treatise on Buddhism entitled The Way of Salvation or Visuddhi-magga. This could hardly have been issued in less than four volumes, two for the text and two for the translation. The other was his Buddhism in Translations, one single large volume. This appeared several years before his death. The larger work he did not live to finish.

¹ Speaking of these difficulties, Warren says: "The Visuddhi-magga is only to be had in native manuscript. It seems almost impossible to understand a Pāli work written on palm-leaves until it has first been transcribed. The natives do not divide the words, and they make use of almost no devices to help the eye, so that it becomes a question of spelling one's way along letter by letter, and it is hardly possible to read currently. Accordingly, I was obliged to copy [the text of the palm-leaves]." (Journal Am. Oriental Soc., vol. 16, page lxvi.) See also Lanman's "Notes on the externals of Indian books," Harvard Oriental Series, volume 11, pages xix to xlviii.

First then, as to Warren's unfinished enterprise, Buddhaghosa's Way of Salvation or Visuddhi-magga, — it is fitting here to say a word about Buddhaghosa and his work and about Warren's plan and his progress towards its achievement.

Buddhaghosa flourished about 400 A.D. He was brought up in India in all the learning of the Brahmans, was converted to Buddhism, went to Ceylon, and became an exceedingly prolific writer. He is the author of a commentary on each of the four great Collections or Nikāyas, in which are recorded the very teachings of Buddha. But his greatest work is the Visuddhi-magga, an encyclopædia raisonnée of Buddhist doctrine. Of all names in the history of Buddhist scholasticism, that of Buddhaghosa is the most illustrious. Indeed, there is a certain fitness in comparing him with the most illustrious of the Latin fathers, and in calling him the Saint Augustine of India. Both were converts, the one to Buddhism, the other to Christianity; both were men of majestic intellect and wide learning; both were prolific writers; both were authors of works which have for fifteen centuries maintained for themselves, each in its sphere, a place of surpassing influence. And it is highly probable that Buddhaghosa, at Great Minster in Ceylon, was composing the Visuddhi-magga at very nearly (if not precisely) the same time at which Saint Augustine was writing The City of God (begun about 413, finished 428).

Warren's plan was to publish in English letters a scholarly edition of the original Pāli text of the Visuddhi-magga, with full but well-sifted critical apparatus, a complete English translation, an index of names, and other useful appendices. Buddhaghosa makes constant citations from the Sacred Texts, quite after the manner of the fathers of the Christian church. In order to enhance the usefulness of his edition, Warren had undertaken to trace back all these quotations to their sources. Of the text, he had already made two type-written copies, and a large part or all of a third copy which he hoped might be final. Of the English version, he had made one third, considerable

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Classics.¹ The teachings of Jesus and Buddha have probably swayed more lives than those of any other great teacher in human history. It is to the credit of Warren's discernment that he saw the importance of interpreting to the Occident the teachings of Buddha, and chose this task as his life-work. It is further to the credit of his sound common sense and his literary skill that he should be the first to present such intractable exotic material in a way so interesting and illuminating to us moderns of the West. And although the subject-matter of Warren's work is translation and (barring his introductions) not original, it is a remarkable implicit comment upon its quality that a man of so broadly enlightened judgment as President Eliot should deem Warren's presentation of it worthy to be placed side by side with the best things of the Confucian, Hebrew, Christian, Hindu and Mohammedan sacred writings, as rendered, for example, by Sir Edwin Arnold or by the authors of the Revised Version of the Bible.

The usefulness of Warren's Buddhism is incalculably enhanced by the inclusion of nearly half of it in The Harvard Classics. Could he have lived to see his life-work become so useful to others, — that would have been for him the reward beyond compare.

Mr. Warren lived but little more than two and a half years after the appearance of his book, but even that short time sufficed to bring him many and cheering words of assurance as to the high scholarly quality of his achievement. It was a genuine and legitimate satis-

¹ In 1909, Charles William Eliot, after forty years of service as President of Harvard University, laid down that office. He had said in public that a five-foot shelf would hold books enough to give a good substitute for a liberal education to any persistent reader who had been denied that privilege in his youth. The New York firm of P. F. Collier and Son proposed that he should choose the works for such a shelf. The outcome was the collection of fifty volumes, all in English, entitled The Harvard Classics, issued in 1910. This collection aims to reach the masses and to be of service to them. But apart from these higher aims, it is published as a commercial enterprise. This means that its sale is vigorously promoted in all legitimate ways by a powerful house of high standing. Already (in 1918) about two hundred thousand sets of fifty volumes each have been sold, that is about one set for every hundred families in our country. New copies are being made at the rate of about two thousand sets each month; and the volume of sales has not decreased because of the war.

Quantity and quality are sometimes in inverse ratio — as witness what John Morley says of the poems of Thomas Gray. But it is perhaps worth telling, in a foot-note addressed to the little world of Harvard men, that, of that little world Emerson, Richard Henry Dana, and Warren with his exposition of the greatest religion of the Orient, have contributed most to this collection.

Warren's work is found in volume 45 (pages 587 to 798), the second of the two volumes bearing the sub-title Sacred Writings.

faction to him to read some of these judgments¹ passed on his work by eminent Orientalists — of England, France, the Netherlands, Japan, India, and Ceylon — welcoming him, as it were, to a well-earned place in their ranks. One of the most pleasing features of his later years was his intercourse with the Venerable Subhūti, a Buddhist Elder, of Waskaduwa, Ceylon. This distinguished monk,² whose great learning and modesty and kindness had endeared him years before to Childers and Fausböll and Rhys Davids, was no less ready with words of encouragement for Mr. Warren, and with deeds of substantial service, especially the procuring of much-needed copies of the manuscripts. In 1893, His Majesty, Chulalonkorn, King of Siam, reached the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne. He celebrated the event by publishing in thirty-nine volumes a memorial edition of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the Sacred Scriptures of his religion. (A most commendable way of celebrating! Occidental sovereigns have sometimes preferred sky-rockets.) Copies were sent, exclusively as gifts, to the principal libraries of Europe and America, the Harvard Library among them. Mr. Warren had sent

¹ Notable among them is the review published in the Dutch magazine, Museum, Maandblad voor philologie en geschiedenis (Groningen, October, 1898), by Jacob Samuel Speyer, the most distinguished pupil of the greatest Dutch Indianist, Kern. Ten years later, Speyer, who had become Kern's successor at the University of Leyden, published in De Gids (Amsterdam, 1908, part 4, pages 141 to 147) an elaborate article upon the Harvard Oriental Series in general, and in particular upon Warren and his work as scholar and as man, under the title "Een Amerikaansche Maecenas."

Here (in spite of its mention of the Editor) should be reprinted a minute officially transmitted in 1908 to the President and Fellows of Harvard College. The Thomsen here subscribing as President, is the well-known writer on the languages of Scandinavia and Asia, Professor Vilhelm Thomsen of the University of Copenhagen. In 1908, Pischel was Professor of Sanskrit at Berlin.

COPENHAGEN, August 20, 1908.

The Fifteenth International Congress of Orientalists desires to put on record the expression of its cordial thanks for the great services to Oriental Science which have been rendered by the co-operation of the President and Fellows of Harvard College, of Professor Lanman as Editor of the Harvard Oriental Series, and of Professor Bloomfield as Author of the monumental Vedic Concordance.

At the same time the Congress would not leave unmentioned the debt of gratitude which this branch of learning owes to the far-sighted and enlightened liberality of the late Henry Clarke Warren, believing that his purposes, now becoming, through the faithful devotion of his friend, Professor Lanman, a reality as embodied in the volumes of the Harvard Oriental Series, are destined to contribute very substantially to our knowledge of the religions and literatures of the East.

PISCHEL, President of the Indian Section.

VILH. THOMSEN, President of the Congress.

SARAUW, General Secretary of the Congress.

² He was Chief High Priest of the Amara-pura Buddhists. He was born in May, 1835, and died in April, 1917, full of years, beloved and honored.

to His Majesty a magnificently bound set of the Harvard Oriental Series; and it was matter of honest pride and pleasure to him to receive from the king in return a beautiful copy of this Tripitaka. For us who remain, it is a satisfaction to know that Mr. Warren used the royal gift with diligence and success.

Thus the life of Henry Warren as a scholar is — we may justly say — memorable in the annals of American learning. And now a word touching the significance of his life as one of the joint-founders of the Harvard Oriental Series.

Since the other joint-founder, the Editor, is also the present writer, it is not competent for him to pass upon the Series as a fact; but it is permissible for him to explain the purpose of the Series. That purpose, as conceived by the Editor, twenty-odd years ago, is set forth in a circular letter written by him at that time. From it, a brief citation:

The diffusion of knowledge by the modern University is effected partly by oral teaching to the students within its walls and in part by publication. This latter function is a highly important one, and is no less legitimate than the former. Among the works published, however, there may be many which would never be issued by an ordinary publishing house, simply because there is little or no money to be made out of them. Of this kind are the works issued by the great learned Academies of Europe. Harvard University already has several publication-endowments: one for history, one for classics, one for political economy. It cannot be argued against them that a book which the public at large does not buy is not worth publishing. All Universities give the student his education at less than cost, the difference being met by endowments or public taxation.

The central point of interest in the history of India is the long development of the religious thought and life of the Hindus, — a race akin, by ties of blood and language, to the Anglo-Saxon stock. The value of the study of non-Christian religions is coming to be recognized by the best friends of Christianity more and more every day. The study tends to broaden and strengthen and universalize the bases of religion, — a result of practical and immediate benefit. Works which promote this study stand first in the plans of the Oriental Series; and they are especially timely now, when so much of the widespread interest in Buddhism and other Oriental systems is misdirected by half-knowledge, or by downright error concerning them. We may add that such works supply the material for the helpful constructive criticism of the foundations of religious belief, to offset the all too abounding destructive criticism of the day.

But meantime, the study of the Orient has come to present itself in new aspects. At this terrible crisis, the relations between the East and the West are of vital import as determining factors for the future. Henceforth, across the Pacific, there will inevitably be an interchange of potent influences, of influences that will affect profoundly the politics, the religion and morals, the philosophy, the literature, the art, — in short, all the elements that make up the civilization of the

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

den, Windisch of Leipzig, Bühler of Vienna, Pischel of Halle, Cappeller of Jena, — and after various promises of cordial coöperation. The Series was started with Kern's Jātaka-mālā in 1891, was maintained through Mr. Warren's life by his gifts, and after his death by his bequests to Harvard University.

Warren has been dead now for almost twenty years. Many, perhaps most, of those for whose personal approval he might have cared, are gone. But he had the intellectual detachment of which the Bhagavad-gita has so much to say. He set store not by the rewards of his work, but by its serviceableness to others. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." I doubt not that he has found it. In June, 1905, the Battle of the Sea of Japan gave me occasion to say (in volume 9, page x) what, after thirteen years, I am glad to repeat unchanged:

The timeliness of the Series as a whole is an eloquent tribute to the discernment of my loved and unforgotten pupil and friend, Henry Clarke Warren. In him were united not only the will and the ability to establish such a publication as this, but also the learning and insight which enabled him to forecast in a general way its possibilities of usefulness. He knew that the East had many a lesson to teach the West; but whether the lesson be repose of spirit or hygiene of the soldier in the field, whether it be the divine immanence or simplicity of life or the overcoming of evil with good, he knew that the first lesson to be taught us was the teachable habit of mind.

If this judgment be right, if these purposes have been measurably attained, — then Warren is worthy to be remembered, not only as a scholar, but also as a man of patriotic and practical public service.

Shortly before Mr. Warren's death, I told him by word of mouth that I hoped and expected to take up his work on Buddhaghosa's Way of Salvation and finish it. "But," I added, "the obligation to Professor Whitney is the prior one." To "revise, bring nearer to completion, and edit" and issue Whitney's Atharva-veda took more of my best working-years than I care to count up. But I have always felt that my frankness, so far from perturbing Mr. Warren, was a comfort to him. And now, since his death, twenty-five volumes¹ have been printed; while, as for the heart-breaking waste of toil on undertakings which (by reason of human frailties, over-sanguineness, hastiness, dilatoriness, or the supreme frailty, death) have proved abortive, — "Let me not think on't."

Meantime, various fast-changing conditions inspire me anew with hope of finishing Warren's work, — hope somewhat more confident by reason of bodily strength. And so I venture to print the stanzas which I wrote soon after Mr. Warren's death, when I supposed that there was but little left for me to do, and that I was "hard by the jungle's edge." The third line of the first stanza ("Till sank thy weary body") is true, not only in a figurative sense, but also in a literal one, as told above, at page 381, paragraph 2. And it may be added that the Pāli word for "to clear" (sodhaya) is used, not only of a way through the jungle, but also of a text, in the sense of "clearing it of errors" or "editing it," and that "clear" is all the more apt when the title of the text is The Way (of Salvation).

¹ Counting volumes 16 and 22, detained, the one in Germany and the other in Bombay, by the war.

TO HENRY CLARKE WARREN

Long didst thou toil this rugged Way to clear,
Patience thine ax-helve, learning keen the blade,
Till sank thy weary body, comrade dear,
Ere thou the open and thy goal hadst made.

Hard by the jungle's edge thy task I took
To bring it — happy labor — to an end.
Now to the West great Buddhaghosa's book
And Eastern wisdom in thy name I send.

Full fifteen centuries, a man of might
This monk hath been unto the morning-land.
Glad wouldst thou be that still his ancient light
Upon our modern candlestick should stand.

For well thou knewst that prophet, saint, nor sage
No chosen people for itself may claim;
That God's revealings, through each land and age,
In voices manifold, are ay the same.

CHARLES ROCKWELL LANMAN

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

LIST OF THE HARVARD ORIENTAL SERIES

REVISED TO DECEMBER, 1920

Volume 1. Jātaka-Mālā. Stories of Buddha's former incarnations, by Ārya Čūra. Edited in Sanskrit [Nāgarī letters] by Professor HENDRIK KERN, University of Leiden, Netherlands. 1891. Second issue, 1914. Pages, 270. Royal 8°. Price, $3.

A masterpiece, as to language and style and metrical form, of Buddhist literature of the Northern Canon. By the Honorable (ārya) Čūra. Stories used as homilies in old Buddhist monasteries. Editio princeps. Kern (1833-1917), long the honored Dean of the Dutch Orientalists, thought that Čūra flourished not far from 600 A.D., or earlier. English translation by Speyer, London, 1895, Frowde.

Volume 2. Sāṅkhya-Pravachana-Bhāṣya, or Commentary on the Exposition of the Sāṅkhya philosophy. By Vijñāna-Bhikṣu. Edited in Sanskrit [Roman letters] by Professor RICHARD GARBE, University of Tübingen, Germany. 1895. Pages, 210. Royal 8°. Price, $3.

Sāṅkhya is dualistic. It recognizes souls and primeval matter, but not God. Vijñāna, however, is a pronounced theist. But in spite of his distortions of the original system, his Commentary (about 1550 A.D.) is the fullest source that we have for a knowledge of the Sāṅkhya system, and one of the most important (Garbe's Preface). Garbe studied the whole work with Bhāgavata Āchārya in Benares. German translation by Garbe, Leipzig, 1889, Brockhaus. Partial English version in J. R. Ballantyne's The Sāṅkhya Aphorisms of Kapila, London, 1885, Trübner.

Volume 3. Buddhism in Translations. Passages selected from the Buddhist sacred books, and translated from the original Pāli into English, by HENRY CLARKE WARREN, late of Cambridge, Massachusetts. 1896. Sixth issue, 1915. Pages, 540. Royal 8°. Price, $1.20.

In accordance with the author's wish, the original price of this beautiful volume was set very low, at $1.20. In spite of greatly changed conditions, that price has been maintained unaltered.

Buddhism portrayed in the words of the Buddhists themselves. The life of Buddha (a beautiful narrative), his teachings, and his monastic order form the substance of this work. The Pāli passages, done into vigorous English and accurately rendered, are chosen with such broad and learned circumspection that they make a systematically complete presentation of their difficult subject. Warren's material is drawn straight from the fountain-head. It is this fact that has given to his work an abiding importance and value. It has been highly praised by competent judges. Moreover, it has enjoyed a very wide circulation in America and Europe and the Orient. And nearly half of the work was included by President Eliot in The Harvard Classics (New York, P. F. Collier and Son), of which a quarter of a million sets and more have been sold. The usefulness of Warren's work has thus been incalculably enhanced.

The life of Henry Warren as a scholar is memorable in the annals of American learning. A brief memorial of his life and public services is appended to volume 30 of this Series, of which he was joint-founder. It is also issued with the Descriptive List of this Series (see above, page 1). The List may be had, free, upon application to the Harvard University Press.

Volume 4. Karpūra-Mañjarī. A drama by the Indian poet Rāja-ṣekhara (900 A.D.). Critically edited in the original Prākṛit [Nāgarī letters], with a glossarial index, and an essay on the life and writings of the poet, by STEN KONOW, Professor of Indic Philology at the University of Christiania, Norway, and Epigraphist to the Government of India.

— And translated into English with introduction and notes, by C. R. LANMAN. 1901. Pages, 318. Royal 8°. Price, $3.

A play of court-intrigue, and the only extant drama written entirely in Prākṛit. It presents interesting parallels with the Braggart Soldier of Plautus.

Volumes 5 and 6. Brhad-Devatā (attributed to Čāunaka), a summary of the deities and myths of the Rig-Veda. Critically edited in the original Sanskrit [Nāgarī letters], with an introduction and seven appendices [volume 5], and translated into English with critical and illustrative notes [volume 6], by Professor ARTHUR ANTHONY MACDONELL, University of Oxford. 1904. Pages, 234 + 350 = 584. Royal 8°. Not sold separately. Price, $6.

The Great-Deity (-book), “hardly later than 400 B.C.,” is one of the oldest books ancillary to the Rig-Veda. It includes very ancient epic material: so the story of Urvaṣī, the nymph that loved a mortal (whence Kālidāsa’s great drama, Urvaṣī). The text is edited in a way that meets the most rigorous demands of exact philological criticism. The typographic presentation of text, version, and notes (critical and expository) is a model of convenience.

Volumes 7 and 8. Atharva-Veda. Translated, with a critical and exegetical commentary, by WILLIAM DWIGHT WHITNEY, late Professor of Sanskrit in Yale University, Editor-in-Chief of The Century Dictionary, an Encyclopedic Lexicon of the English Language. — Revised and brought nearer to completion and edited by C. R. LANMAN. 1905. Pages, 1212. Super-royal 8°. Not sold separately. Price, $10.

The Atharva-Veda is, next after the Rig-Veda, the most important of the oldest texts of India. Whitney (1827–1894) was the most eminent American philologist of his century, and these monumental volumes form the crowning achievement of his life-long labors as an Indianist. For his translation, he expressly disclaims finality; but his austere self-restraint, resisting all allurements of fanciful interpretation, makes of his version, when taken with his critical and exegetical commentary, the sure point of departure for future study of this Veda and for its final comprehension.

The text-critical notes form the most important single item of the work. These give the various readings of the “authorities.” The term “authorities” includes not only manuscripts (of Europe, India, Kashmir), but also living reciters (the Hindu equivalents, and in some respects the superiors, of manuscripts); and, in addition, the corresponding (and often variant) passages of the other Vedas. Whitney gives also the data of the scholiast as to authorship and divinity and meter of each stanza; extracts from the ancillary literature concerning ritual and exegesis; and a literal translation. Version and Comment proceed pari passu. Prefixed is an elaborate historical and critical introduction, and a sketch of Whitney’s life, with a noble medallion portrait. A leaf of the birch-bark ms. from Kashmir is beautifully reproduced in color. The typography is strikingly clear.

Few texts of antiquity have been issued with appurtenant critical material of so large scope. And never before or since has the material for the critical study of an extensive Vedic text been so comprehensively and systematically gathered from so multifarious sources, and presented with masterly accuracy in so well-digested form.

Volume 9. The Little Clay Cart (Mṛc-chakatika). A Hindu drama attributed to King Shūdraka. Translated from the original Sanskrit and Prākṛits into English prose and verse by ARTHUR WILLIAM RYDER, Instructor in Sanskrit in Harvard University. 1905. Pages, 207. Royal 8°. Price, $2.

A play of such variety, humor, and swift-moving action, that it has often been produced on the modern stage. Version, true and spirited. “The champagne has been decanted, and has not lost its fizz." Noble typography (Merrymount Press). Most books of this Series are technical. This one, like Warren's Buddhism, may be happily chosen as a gift-book.

Volume 10. Vedic Concordance: being an alphabetic index to every line of every stanza of the published Vedic literature and to the liturgical formulas thereof, that is, an index [in Roman letters] to the Vedic mantras, together with an account of their variations in the different Vedic books. By Professor MAURICE BLOOMFIELD, of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. 1906. Pages, 1102. Royal 4°. Price, $15.

The Vedas are, in general, the oldest extant records of the antiquity of India, and indeed of Indo-European antiquity. They are the sacred books of the oldest religion of the Hindus. They represent parts of a mass of traditional material, current in the various schools of Vedic learning, and handed down from teacher to pupil by word of mouth. What was originally one and the same stanza, appears in the texts of the various schools in more or less varying forms. The variations are often such as appear in the varying forms of popular ballads or of church hymns. Thus it happens that the texts of these different Vedic schools are often virtually related to each other and to their presumable original, as are the several kindred manuscripts of (let us say) a Greek play to each other and to the archetype from which they are descended. The comparison of these variant forms of a given text is often indispensable for ascertaining its original form and true meaning. This comparison is just what the Concordance enables us easily to effect. It is a tool of the very first importance for future editors and revisers and translators of Vedic texts.

The Concordance covers nearly all the important published texts, and is in one single alphabetic arrangement and one single volume. It is a royal quarto of over 1100 pages, of double columns, containing 125,000 lines or more. For the lines of the Rig-Veda alone, about 40,000 entries are required. The lines of the Atharva-Veda by themselves would require over 18,000 entries, but are often merged with those of their Rig-Veda correspondents. No less than 119 texts have been drawn upon for contributions to the work.

The book was printed (in the early years of the century) in a limited edition of 1000 copies, now half exhausted; and was printed, not from electrotype plates, but from type. The expense in money alone, to say nothing of scholarly labor, was about seven thousand dollars. It is not likely that any publisher or scholar will soon undertake a new edition. For many decades, doubtless, the work will maintain its value unimpaired, an enduring monument to the industry and learning and resolute will of Professor Bloomfield.

Volume 11. The Pañcha-tantra: a collection of ancient Hindu tales, in the recension (called Pañchākhyānaka, and dated 1199 A.D.) of the Jaina monk, Pūrṇa-bhadra, critically edited in the original Sanskrit [in Nāgarī letters; and, for the sake of beginners, with word-division] by Dr. JOHANNES HERTEL, Professor am königlichen Realgymnasium, Doebern, Saxony. 1908. Pages, 344. Royal 8°.

Volume 12. The Pañchatantra-text of Pūrṇabhadra: critical introduction and list of variants. By Professor HERTEL. 1912. Pages, 246. Royal 8°.

Volume 13. The Pañchatantra-text of Pūrṇabhadra, and its relation to texts of allied recensions, as shown in Parallel Specimens. By Professor HERTEL. 1912. Pages, 10: and 19 sheets, mounted on guards and issued in atlas-form. Royal 8°. Volumes 11-13 not sold separately. Price of all three together, $4.

Volume 14. The Pañchatantra: a collection of ancient Hindu tales, in its oldest recension, the Kashmirian, entitled Tantrākhyāyika. The original Sanskrit text [in Nāgarī letters],

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

Three works in one pair of covers. The Rules are a set of mental pegs on which to hang the principles and precepts of a system which you must learn from the living teacher of your "school." The Comment is a reinvestiture of the skeleton of the Rules with the flesh and blood of comprehensible details. And the Explanation is of course a commentary on the Comment. The Comment is the oldest written systematic exposition of Yoga-doctrine in Sanskrit that we possess.

Of the Hindu philosophies, by far the most important are the ancient dualism called Sāṅkhya, the monism of the Vedānta, and the Yoga-system. Kāuṭilya, prime-minister of Chandragupta (300 B.C.), mentions Sāṅkhya and Yoga as current in his day. But the elements of Yoga, rigorous austerities and control of the senses, are indefinitely antique, and are one of the oldest and most striking products of the Hindu mind and character.

When one considers the floods of pseudo-scientific writing with which the propagandists of Indian "isms" in America have deluged us, one is the better prepared to appreciate the self-restraint of Dr. Woods in keeping all that pertains to miracle-mongering and sensationalism in the background, and in devoting himself to the exposition of the spiritual and intellectual aspects of Yoga. His work "continues the tradition of austere scholarship" which has, from the beginning, characterized the Harvard Oriental Series.

Volumes 18 and 19. The Veda of the Black Yajus School, entitled Tāittirīya Samhitā. Translated from the original Sanskrit prose and verse, with a running commentary. By ARTHUR BERRIEDALE KEITH, D.C.L. (Oxford), of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law, and of His Majesty's Colonial Office, sometime Acting Professor of Sanskrit at the University of Oxford, Author of 'Responsible Government in the Dominions.' Volume 18, kāṇḍas I-III; volume 19, kāṇḍas IV-VII. 1914. Pages 464 + 374 = 838. Royal 8°. Price $7. Not sold separately.

The Rig-Veda holds unquestioned primacy in the sacred literature of the Hindus; but their greatest mediæval scholiast on the Vedas, Sāyana, did not write his commentary on the Rig-Veda until after his commentary on the Yajur-Veda, because (as he expressly tells us) of the transcendent importance of the Yajur-Veda for the sacrifice. The Yajur-Veda is the Veda of sacrificial formulas. An accurate edition of the Tāittirīya-Samhitā was published in 1871-2 by Weber. It waited nigh fifty years for a translator.

For the difficult task of translation, no English or American Sanskritist was so well qualified by previous studies as Keith. To it he has brought his wide and varied learning, and with such effectiveness as to produce a work, which, in spite of its large extent, is notable for its well-rounded completeness. The entire text is translated. The commentary runs pari passu with the version, embodies the gist of Sāyana's scholia, and is presented with the utmost typographical perspicuity. An elaborate introduction is given, treating of the relation of this text to kindred texts, its contents, language, style, and date ('about 600 B.C.'), and the religious ritual of ancient India.

Volumes 20 and 24. Rig-Veda Repetitions. The repeated verses and distichs and stanzas of the Rig-Veda in systematic presentation and with critical discussion. By MAURICE BLOOMFIELD, Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. 1916. Pages, 508 + 206 = 714. Royal 8°. Not sold separately. Price, $5.

Volume 20 contains Part 1: The repeated passages of the Rig-Veda, systematically presented in the order of the Rig-Veda, with critical comments and notes. Volume 24 contains Part 2: Comments and classifications from metrical and lexical and grammatical points of view, and from the point of view of the themes and divinities of the repeated passages. Also Part 3: Lists and indexes.

The aim of this work is to help us to understand the oldest religious document of Indo-European antiquity. The arrangement of Part 1 enables the student to bring under his eye at one time all the passages that he needs to compare, and to do so with utmost ease and speed. The material of this work was, from a typographical point of view, exceedingly intractable. The result as a whole is a marvel of clarity and convenience.

This work is the first of three natural sequels to Bloomfield's great Vedic Concordance: 1. The Rig-Veda Repetitions; 2. The Reverse Concordance; 3. The Vedic Variants. A draft of the second has been actually prepared by Bloomfield. And he and Edgerton have in hand the first draft of the third, a systematic presentation and critical discussion of the variant readings of the Vedic texts.

Volumes 21 and 22 and 23. Rāma's Later History, or Uttara-Rāma-Charita, an ancient Hindu drama by Bhavabhūti. Critically edited in the original Sanskrit and Prākṛit, with an introduction and English translation and notes and variants, etc. By SHRIPAD KRISHNA BELVALKAR, Graduate Student of Harvard University. (Now, 1920, Professor of Sanskrit at Deccan College, Poona, India.)

Dr. Belvalkar, when returning to India in 1914 from his studies at Harvard, shipped his manuscript-collations and other papers and his books by the German freighter, Fangturm. In August, 1914, the Fangturm was interned at the port of Palma, Balearic Islands. In 1919, she was released. In May, 1920, Dr. Belvalkar recovered his papers.

Volume 21 was issued in 1915, complete.

Of volume 22, the first 92 pages, containing the text of the whole play, have been in print since January, 1915, awaiting for nigh five and one-half¹ years the recovery of the material for the rest of the book.

Of volume 23, the material included collation-sheets giving the readings of manuscripts from widely-separated parts of India, from Nepal to Madras, from Calcutta to Bombay. In spite of the generous assistance of His Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council, the work of getting the loan of these mss. was so great that it seemed best not to try to do it again, but to await the release of the Fangturm. — There is hope now that volumes 22 and 23 may be issued.

Volume 21. Rāma's Later History. Part 1. Introduction and translation. (Prefixed is a convenient synoptic analysis of the play. The introduction treats of Bhavabhūti's life and date and works, and includes a summary of the Rāma-story as given by the Rāmāyaṇa. Lanman adds an essay entitled 'A method for citing Sanskrit dramas.' The method is very simple and practical.) 1915. Royal 8°. Pages 190. Price, $2.

Volume 22. Rāma's Later History. Part 2. The text, with index, glossaries, etc. (This was printed at Bombay, with the exquisitely beautiful type, newly cast for this work, of Jāvaji's Nirṇaya Sāgara Press, and upon paper made expressly for this edition at the Wolvercote Mill of Oxford. Each Prākṛit speech is followed by the Sanskrit version in immediate sequence.) See above.

Volume 23. Rāma's Later History. Part 3. Explanatory and critical epilogue. (Critical account of the manuscripts. Running expository comment. The variant readings of the mss. The typographical 'make-up' of Comment and Variants into pages is such that they go pari passu. These epilegomena close with an essay on the two text-traditions of the play, a time-analysis, a note on the Hindu stage, etc.) See above.

Volume 24. Rig-Veda Repetitions. Parts 2 and 3. By Professor BLOOMFIELD. Described above, with volume 20.

Volume 25. Rig-Veda Brāhmaṇas: The Aitareya and Kauṣṭaki Brāhmaṇas of the Rig-Veda. Translated from the original Sanskrit. By ARTHUR BERRIEDALE KEITH, D.C.L., D.Litt., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law, Regius Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology at the University of Edinburgh. 1920. Pages, 567. Royal 8°. Price $5.

In August, 1915, this work was ready for printing. In August, 1916, it was delivered to the Controller of the Oxford University Press. In 1918, the Press had nigh 350 men at the war. Of the older men who were left, many were busy with urgent war-work, such as a Report on Trench-fever for the American Expeditionary Force. And when, after the armistice, the printing was resumed, the author was engrossed in the work of Lord Crewe's Committee on the Home Administration of Indian Affairs.

The Vedic literature falls into three clearly sundered groups: the Vedic hymns or Mantras; the Brāhmaṇas, 'the priestlies' or 'priestly (discourses)'; and the Sūtras. Keith thinks that the Aitareya is not later than 600 B.C. The plan of the work is like that of volumes 18-19: elaborate introduction; translation; running comment on the same page. The skill of the priestly story-tellers is at its best in the splendid legend of Cunaḥcepa (threatened sacrifice of son by father: cf. Isaac, Iphigeneia, Phrixos). Despite the pseudo-profundity and puerility of the Brāhmaṇas, they are of genuine significance to the student of Hindu antiquity, social and religious. And they are in fact the oldest Indo-European prose extant.

Volumes 26 and 27. Vikrama's Adventures, or The Thirty-two Tales of the Throne. A collection of stories about King Vikrama, as told by the Thirty-two Statuettes that supported his throne. Edited in four different recensions of the Sanskrit original (Vikrama-charita or Sinhāsana-dvātrīṇṇakā) and translated into English with an introduction, by FRANKLIN EDGERTON, Assistant Professor of Sanskrit at the University of Pennsylvania. Nearly ready.

Vikrama's Adventures is one of the most famous story-books of mediæval India. Vikrama is one of the most noted quasi-historical heroes of his times. His magic throne, hidden upon his death, is discovered by a later king, Bhoja. Each of the thirty-two (dvā-trīṇṇat) statuettes that support his throne (sinhāsana) tells one story to Bhoja. Hence the alternative title. The theme of the tales is Vikrama, who is meant to serve as a kind of Hindu King Arthur, an example for real kings.

Edgerton hopes that his work may prove suggestive as a model for students of comparative literature. The text of each of the four recensions (Southern, Metrical, "Brief," Jainistic) is printed in horizontally parallel sections, so that each page contains those parts which correspond to each other in substance. And the translation is treated in like manner. Comparisons are thus facilitated to a degree never before attained in a work of this kind.

From all this, Edgerton reconstructs, with some detail, and with reasonable certainty, the original work from which the current versions are derived. This he presents in the form of a Composite Outline, the concrete solution of a problem in literary genetics.

Volumes 28 and 29 and 30. Buddhist Legends. Translated from the original Pāli text of the Dhammapada Commentary, by EUGENE WATSON BURLINGAME, Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, sometime Harrison Fellow for Research at the University of Pennsylvania and Johnston Scholar in Sanskrit at the Johns Hopkins University and Lecturer on Pāli in Yale University. 1921. Pages, 366 + 370 + 378 = 1114. Royal 8°. Not sold separately. Price $15.

Dhāmma-pada, or Way of Righteousness, is the name of one of the canonical books of the Buddhist Sacred Scriptures. It consists of 423 stanzas. These are reputed to be

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

Never be without a book!

Forgotten Books Full Membership gives universal access to
797,885 books from our apps and website, across all your devices:
tablet, phone, e-reader, laptop and desktop computer

A library in your pocket for $8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

THE HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS

publishes other works relating to India, as follows:

Sanskrit Reader: Text and Vocabulary and Notes. By CHARLES ROCKWELL LANMAN, Wales Professor of Sanskrit at Harvard University. Seventh issue, 1920. Royal 8°. Pages, 430. Price, $3.

The Reader furnishes the text for 60 or 80 lessons, and with it, the needed lexicon and notes. The notes make constant reference to Whitney's Sanskrit Grammar: see below. These two volumes supply all that is strictly indispensable for the beginner. The text is in the Oriental (Nāgarī) letters; but a transliteration of the first four pages in Roman letters is added. The Reader is designed especially to meet the needs of those who have not the aid of a teacher.

The text is chosen: 1. from Classical Sanskrit works (Nala-story, fables of Hitopadeśa, "Manu's Laws"); and 2. from the Vedic literature (Rig-Veda hymns, Brāhmaṇas, Sūtras for wedding and burial). A literary-historical introduction is given for each kind of text. The vocabulary is in Roman letters, and is elaborated with the utmost care. Special heed is given to the development of the meanings (semantics: pāda, foot, leg, leg of lamb, quarter, quarter of a four-lined stanza, line, line of a three-lined stanza), and also to the etymological cognates in English, Greek, and so on (ta-d, τό, ðæ-t, tha-t, is-tu-d).

Parts of Nala and Hitopadesha in English letters. Prepared by C. R. LANMAN. 1889. Royal 8°. Pages, 50. Price, 50 cents.

A reprint of the first 44 pages of the Reader (see above), transliterated from the Oriental characters into English letters. It corresponds page for page and line for line with its original, so that the references of the Vocabulary and Notes of the Reader apply exactly to this reprint. With the Grammar and Reader and this reprint, the student is enabled to acquire a knowledge of the structure of the Sanskrit and to do some reading, without first learning the Oriental letters.

Sanskrit Grammar: including both the Classical language, and the older dialects of Veda and Brāhmaṇa. By WILLIAM DWIGHT WHITNEY, late Professor of Sanskrit at Yale University. Fourth issue of second edition, 1921. 8°. Pages, 578. Price, $4.50.

The greatest extant repository of the grammatical facts concerning the Sanskrit language. A masterpiece of orderly arrangement. Prefixed is a brief account of the literature of India.

Vedanta Philosophy. Outline of the Vedanta system of philosophy according to Shankara. By PAUL DEUSSEN. Translated by JAMES H. WOODS, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University, and CATHARINE B. RUNKLE of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Second edition. 1915. 8°. Pages, 56. Price, 50 cents.

This book, a translation of the summary given by Deussen at the end of his monumental work, Das System des Vedanta, was first published in 1906. Since then, thanks to the learning and enthusiasm of Charles Johnston, the whole great work has been made accessible in an English version (Chicago, 1912, The Open Court Publishing Company). Nevertheless, the small book was so inexpensive and practical, that a new edition was made in 1915. The summary, although brief and compact, is yet so lucid and adequate, — in short, so altogether admirable, that it is not likely soon to be superseded by a better exposition of what has been to untold millions at once a philosophy and a religion.

IN PREPARATION

Sanskrit Grammar. The essentials, in briefest form and for beginners, as to sounds and sound-changes and inflection. With an appendix of linguistic Comment, entirely separate from the Grammar, and drawn from English and Greek and Latin. By C. R. LANMAN. 1921. Royal 8°. Pages, about 50 + 50. Price, $1.

Of all the Indo-European languages, Sanskrit is incomparably well adapted as an elementary study for the purposes of mental discipline in general and of rigorous linguistic training in particular. The transparency of its structure is absolutely unique. The various elements — prefix, root, derivative suffix, inflectional ending — which in synthesis constitute the word, are easily made the subject of quick and certain analysis by the veriest beginner. Thus Sanskrit serves best to reveal the fundamental principles which underlie the structure of English, Greek, Latin, etc. For these have suffered linguistic erosion to such a degree that their original structural features are often no longer recognizable. The habit and power of alert observation and of linguistic reflection (such, for example, as shows you without reference to any book, the connection of batch with bake, of fil-th with foul, of gris-t with gri'd) are best won by the study of some foreign language. One single year of Sanskrit may, with proper books, be made so fruitful, that any intending Anglicist or Hellenist or Latinist may well hesitate to forego the unmatched opportunity which it offers for winning a habit and a power that shall enable him to tackle his English or his Greek or his Latin more vigorously and effectively.

For this purpose, the mastery of Oriental alphabets is of no use whatever. The inflections and sound-changes of Sanskrit are far less difficult than is commonly supposed, and are positively easy if you separate the difficulties of the language from those of the writing. Therefore this grammar prints all Sanskrit words in Roman letters. The use of Roman letters makes clear to the eye, instantly and without a word of comment, countless facts as to the structure and analysis of the forms. And by combining ingenious typographic arrangement with the use of Roman letters, it is possible to accomplish wonders for the visualizing memory.

The explanatory or illustrative matter, drawn from English, Greek, and Latin, will be found helpful and often entertaining. Thus palatalization (important in Sanskrit: k becomes ch, g becomes j) is illustrated by drink drench, hang hinge, and so on. The section-numbers of the Comment correspond throughout with those of the Grammar, so that reference from the one to the other is 'automatic.'

Bhāratān Readings. Easy and interesting stories from the Mahā-Bhārata in the original Sanskrit. Printed in Roman letters, with a literal English version. By C. R. LANMAN.

These show to the beginner how exceedingly easy the easy epic texts are. They are chosen with common sense and good taste, and are purged of long-winded descriptive passages. They are in simple unstilted language, entertaining, full of swift-moving action and incident. Among them are the story of Çakuntalā (heroine of the masterpiece of the Hindu drama, and mother of Bhārata: see above, page 5), the Flood, the great Gambling-scene, the Night-scene on the Ganges (in which the fallen heroes come forth from the river and talk with the living), Vipula (who restrains Ruchi from a lapse of virtue by hypnotizing her), the Man in the Pit (prototype of the famous mediæval allegory), Nala and Damayanti (cut down from a thousand stanzas to a few hundred), and so on. To make easier and quicker the understanding of the text, each stanza is printed as four lines (not two), and the literal version is given in a parallel column.

The Indic Alphabet called Nāgarī, in which Sanskrit is commonly printed. A brief manual for beginners. By C. R. LANMAN.

This is not to be taken up until the student has acquired a considerable vocabulary of common Sanskrit words, and such familiarity with the inflectional endings and prepositional prefixes and with the rules of sound-combination, as shall enable him quickly to separate the words, which, in the writing of India, are confusingly run together. By printing the little book at Bombay, with the rich and admirable type-fonts of the Nirṇaya Sāgara Press, it will be easy to make many things clear which are now stones of stumbling.

THIS PAGE IS LOCKED TO FREE MEMBERS
Purchase full membership to immediately unlock this page

HISTORY

Tens of thousands of important historical sources, many previously unobtainable, are now available for the first time with a Forgotten Books Full Membership.

Unlimited Access
$8.99/month

Continue

*Fair usage policy applies

CANADA, DOMINION OF

Montreal, McGill University L.

Toronto, University of Toronto L.

EUROPE

Austria

Vienna, Academy of Sciences
 — Hof-Bibliothek, Hofburg
 — University Library
 — Oriental Institute of the U.

Belgium

Brussels, B. Royale de Belgique
 Louvain, B. de l'Université

Czecho-Slovakia

Prague, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Bohemian Society of Sciences

Denmark

Copenhagen, Royal Danish Academy
 — University Library

Finnland

Helsingfors, Finnish-Ugrian Society

France

Lyons, B. de l'Université
 Paris, B. de l'Institut de France — Bibliothèque Nationale
 — B. du Musée Guimet
 — B. de la Société Asiatique
 — U. de Paris à la Sorbonne
 Strasbourg, B. de l'Université
 Toulouse, B. de l'Université

Germany

Berlin, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Indogermanisches Seminar der U.
 — Königliche Bibliothek
 — Prussian Ac. of Sciences
 Bonn, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Orientalisches Seminar der U.
 Breslau, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Erlangen, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Freiburg in Baden, Universitäts-B.
 Göttingen, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Society of Sciences
 Halle, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Deutsche Morgenländische Gesellschaft
 Heidelberg, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Jena, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Kiel, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Königsberg, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Leipzig, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Indogermanisches Institut, U.
 — Saxon Society of Sciences

Germany (continued)

Munich, Bavarian Ac. of Sciences
 — Hof- und Staats-Bibliothek
 — Universitäts-Bibliothek
 — Seminar für Arische Philologie
 Tübingen, Universitäts-Bibliothek
 Würzburg, Universitäts-Bibliothek

Great Britain

Aberdeen, University Library
 Cambridge, University Library
 Edinburgh, Advocates' Library
 — University Library
 Glasgow, University Library
 London, British Museum
 — India Office Library
 — Royal Asiatic Society L.
 Manchester, Victoria U. L.
 Oxford, Bodleian Library
 — Indian Institute
 — Balliol College Library
 St. Andrews, University L.

Greece

Athens, 'Εθνική Βιβλιοθήκη τῆς 'Ελλάδος

Italy

Bologna, Reale B. Universitaria
 Florence, B. Nazionale Centrale
 — Società Asiatica Italiana
 Milan, Biblioteca Ambrosiana
 Naples, Regia B. Universitaria
 Padua, Regia B. Universitaria
 Rome, B. Apostolica Vaticana
 — Accademia dei Lincei
 Turin, B. Nazionale di Torino

Netherlands

Amsterdam, Royal Ac. of Sciences
 The Hague, Koloniale Bibliotheek
 Leiden, Rijks-Universiteit
 Utrecht, University Library

Norway

Christiania, University Library

Russia

Petrograd, Public Library — Academy of Sciences

Spain

Madrid, Biblioteca Nacional